(BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.) NEW YORK, June 24.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Sun's Washington special says: "Of several propositions that have been considered by the military authorities looking to the muster in of volunteer troops, that which has been viewed most favorably provides for the organization of three brigades of three regiments each. Before the President started on his New England trip this proposition was laid before him and details explained, but no decision to enlist any more volunteers than those necessary for organizing three regiments from among the State now in the Philippines was reached.

"The President said very emphatically to his advisors that he was opposed to mustering in a single man under the authority conveyed by the Army Reorganization Bill for the formation of a provisional army of 35,000 Nothing has been received at the de-partment from the President to indicate change of mind on his part, and it was said today by a high official that in his opinion three regiments to be organized in the Philippines would be all that would be enlisted.

"It is not urged by those who favor the adoption of the first-named plan that these volunteers shall be sent to the Philippines, but that they shall be organized and drilled in the United States and held for any emergency. "Gen. Corbin said today, if enlistments of volunteers were authorized only the very best material would be taken. The government wanted men who would not be affected by town meetings demanding their discharge or recall from necessary duty. The authorities, he said, did not want married men or boys. They wanted single men old enough to understand that enlist. ing in the army was a serious busi-

YALE'S NEW EXECUTIVE.

PRESIDENT HADLEY MAKES HIS MAIDEN ADDRESS.

[A. P. EARLY MORNING REPORT.]
NEW HAVEN (Ct.,) June 21.—President-elect Arthur Twinning Hadley delivered his first speech, since he was made the official head of Yale, before the graduating class of the Hill House High School of this city, and made a profound impression. Prof. Hadley attacked trusts, praised the navy and criticised the army. He said in part:
"The currency, interstate commerce, foreign relations, the aftermath of the late war and the era of colonial expansion which is a strong possibility, are only a few of the grave questions which our nation and executive must solve and solve speedily. What is the new education which we must have in to meet these greater and wider

"If we are to handle millions we need more arithmetic than when we handled only hundreds. We need more languages if we are to deal with foreign nations. We shall need to read more, if we are to understand the conditions, the attitude and the manner of thinking of alien races. This is essential to a fair and correct judgment of foreign affairs. Their habits of thought must affairs. Their habits of thought must be known to us, if we are to handle and deal with those races. But on the other hand, too much study of the machinery of government is positively detrimental to correct training, for unless we have an exceptional teacher, the pupil is likely to be overwhelmed by too much machinery, and get but little of the spirit that drives it. Excellent as the Constitution of the United States is and proves itself, it is not because of our judiciary system and our free press that this country is self-governed, and, on the whole, we are governed. We are governed by public sentiment.

"We are abused by trusts, and where men prefer party to country, and the interest of their district to that of the country; where men look upon invertiblem as a means to enhance where men prefer party to country, and the interest of their district to that of the country; where men look upon imperialism as a means to enhance their own interests, as against the benefit of the races involved, it is a grave wrong. England has a policy which we may well imitate. Her public men find their forte in the advancement of the whole, not as they did 100 years ago, when they went to India to grasp and gather up a fortune. They now go to India and help build up the great Indian empire.

"If you want an object lesson, from last year's events, of this esprit de corps in public service, consider the work of our navy as compared with the different record of the army. In the navy each officer is as eager for distinction and promotion as in the army, but each considers himself a part of a whole, whose glory is greater than any which he as an individual can gain. In the army the scramble for commissions wrought much havoc, and the record of that branch is not equal to our magnificent fighting navy.

"We are very far from the ideal in equal to our magnificent fighting navy.

"We are very far from the ideal in practical politics, but it is toward this that we must make our way. The alternative is destruction. By what means, then, shall we purify our politics. Civil service reform may be dissurted as to its practical workings. but the idea which it contains of public office as a public trust must pre-vail. And it must prevail within a genera on, now that we have embarked on an imperial career." FRUIT COMBINE DENIED

Red posters displayed at various points heralded a meeting of Dreyfusites tonight in the Hall de Venise, the biggest dancing hall in Brest, situated in the vicinity of the arsenal. The demonstration was organized by Socialists, and was attended by 1200 persons, the audience consist-ing mainly of Socialists and anarchists, together with a few detectives.

The speakers, among whom were most of the Socialist leaders, addressed the audience from a balcony. They attacked militarism and reaction. The audience enthusiastically cheered all reference to Dreyfus, Zola and Picquart. A couple of individuals who cried "A bas juifus" were promptly hustled out, but otherwise the meeting was perfectly calm, and the squads of police who were stationed in the addipolice who were stationed in the adia.

His speech, which was delivered under rather affecting circumstances, did more to strengthen his following in the convention than all his political workers have been able to accomplish since the delegates assembled. THE DAY'S PROCEEDINGS. [ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.] LOUISVILLE, (Ky.,) June 24.—Torn with dissension, the Kentucky Democrats are having a hard time holding their State convention. After three days of waiting under temporary organization for the Credentials Committee to dispose of contests involving about a third of the whole strength of the convention, its report was read this morning. The committee disposed of contests in thirty-two counties, involving about 350 seats. These were all decided in favor of Stone or Goebel except in three cases, Callowell county and the Forty-fourth legislative dis-trict where Hardin delegates were seated, and Nicolas county where the delegation was divided between contestant and contestee. A minority report was presented by the Hardin

The good humor which prevailed to day was in refreshing contrast with the rancor of yesterday. Good order prevailed from the start, and a marked disposition to expedite business was shown. Twenty minutes were allowed to each side for debate on the creden-tials reports. Many protests were made by representatives of unseated delegations, and the family quarrels of delegations, and the family quarries of county organizations were aired a such length that in several cases th convention took the matter in han and cried down several obstreperou delegates with grievances.

An interesting colloquy arose be-tween Congressman Berry of the Sixth district and Judge Tarvin of Covingdistrict and Judge Tarvin of Coving-ton over the contest in Campbell and Kenton counties, where the Hardin delegates were unseated in favor of those favoring Goebel. Berry cham-ploned the cause of the Hardin men, and Judge Tarvin vigorously attacked his Democracy, accusing him of being unfaithful to Bryan and silver. We favor the destruction of the result as well as the removal of the causes. In the matter of state affairs, the platform indorses the election law passed by the last Legislature, known as the "Goebel law," and the law to "prevent extortion through unfair and discriminating freight rates by the transportation companies," both of which were passed over Gov. Finally a call of the roil was reached, the question being the adoption of the minority report by the Committee on Credentials. The convention voted ayes 228, nays 441. The majority report of the committee was then adopted, both sides cheered, and the first rays of harmony broke upon the convention after a week of wrangling and bitterness which several times threatened to result in a split.

The applause had barely subsfded when Gen. W. P. Watt Hardin emerged from the crowd on the stage and started another demonstration. The time had come when, he said, an expression from him was necessary to unite the party. After a a few words of cordial thanks to his followers, he announced his withdrawal from the race for Governor, and appealed earnestly for the undivided support of the party in behalf of the nominee. He was glad to waive all personal consideration, and do all he could to allay the bitterness which had been aroused during the last few days. He urged conciliation and harmony in the interest of Bryan.

The Committee on Organization reported. It recommended continuance of the temporary organization, with Judge Redwine as chairman, and was unanimously adopted.

IRY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES. WASHINGTON, June 24 .- [Exclusive Dispatch.] About a year ago the De partment of Agriculture, convinced that the fruiting of the Smyna fig in California and the consequent production of a which should equal the standard of commerce, was dependent upon introduction from the south of Europe and its establishment in Call. fornia of a little insect which the Medi-terranean, countries fertilizes the Smyrna fig, began a series of experimental introductions of the insect question has been studied by Dr. Eisen of the California Academy of Sciences; George C. Roeding of Fresno, and John Rock of Niles.

At Fresno and Niles numbers of Smyrna figs, as well as wild figs from the south of Europe, in which the fertilizing insect, known as the blastophaga, develops have been started. Dr. Howard, an entomologist of the De-partment of Agriculture, went to California in the spring of 1898 to look over the ground and ascertain the conditions which would settle the best points in which to attempt the introduction of the insect. Another agent of the de-partment, Walter T. Swingle, was sent to the south of Europe for the purpose of sending to this country cuttings of a variety of wild figs, and to send living specimens of the blastophaga. It was thought worth while to send to this country fruit of the wild fig, or Capri figs, containing the living insects, and this was done on a number of occasions by Swingle. A Capri fig tree was enclosed on Mr. Roeding's place at Fresno, and on the arrival of the European figs, insects which were found to be in good condition were liberated within the inclosure.

It now turns out to be a great good fortune, as some insects brought over n 1898 did succeed in the penetration of the closed flowers of Capri figs growing at Fresno, and they laid eggs and practically established themselves in California. The first step in the experimental work was therefore a success. Since the insect maintained itself for an entire year there is reason to suppose that it will continue to breed, and California in the future will be able to place a fig on the market which will possess the same su-perior flavor as that which has given imported Smyrna figs their preëminent ommercial rank.

This flavor seems, without doubt, dependent upon the number of ripened seeds within the fruit. This fact has been ascertained through experiment in the artificial fertilization of Smyrna figs. grown in California. Experi-ments have been made by Dr. Elsen and Mr. Roeding, with the transfer of pollen from the Capri figs by means of a tooth pick and by means of a blow pipe. In this way a large number of seeds were fertilized, probably half as many as are fertilized by the work of the blastophaga in Asia Minor, but already the characteristic flavor of the

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]
BERLIN, June 24.—[Special Cable Letter. Copyright, 1899.] The attention of the Reichstag this week was chiefly devoted to the Anti-Strike Bill, and the public showed more interest in this than any other measure of the session. The press devoted a vast amount of space to the measure, and the agitation senior to the measure. the agitation against it became more active during the few days preceding the debate. This was not confined to the Socialists, as the evangelicals, Catholics and labor unions and the Central Committee of Christian Miners pronounced against the bill. Even the ommittee of the Trade Court of Berlin, a semi-court institution, petitioned against the measure, and asked all other such courts and organizations of laborers and employés to do the same It was clear from the beginning of the debate that the government's case was lost. The Ministers and Conservatives never showed a ray of confidence. Their whole attitude was apologetic. On the other hand, the attacks, which were uncommonly sharp, came from all parties except the Conservatives.

Before the Canal Committee Herr Thielen, the Prussian Minister of Public Works, in behalf of the ministry, and with the expressed approval of the Emperor, said if the bill passed the government would undertake to improve the waterways in Upper Sliesia to Berlin, so as to make it navigable for 650-ton boats and equalize the railway rates of Sliesia with those of Westphalia, and give Westphalia a concession to build a canal.

The present prospects of the bill are clouded. As soon as it was seen the ministry was able to make compensations, the Agrarians adopted a policy of smothering the measure under a multitude of claims, estimated already at half a billion marks.

In the Canal Committee Herr Barth, Freissinge leader, moved concessions which the government regarded as inadmissible and his motion was rejected. This foreshadows the committee's rejection of the bill. If it is not passed by the House over the committee's rejection of the bill. If it is not passed by the House over the committee's rejection of the bill. If it is not passed by the House over the committee's rejection of the bill. If it is not passed by the House over the committee's rejection of the bill. If it is not passed by the House over the committee's rejection of the bill. If it is not passed by the House over the committee's rejection of the bill. If it is not passed that the Premier has had a royal decree to that effect ready since the 15th inst. The Cologne Gazette not only expects an early dissolution, but considers a change of ministry probable, and plainly hints that Dr. Miquel will have to go.

bled to the Associated Press June 16, was aimed at the United States and was intended to counteract the differtial treatment of German sugar and reciprocity concession to France. The paper reiterates the charge that the United States has broken the most favored nation clause of the treaty with Germany, and points to the complaints of exporters at the alleged annoyance they are subjected to by the United States custom officials.

The report of the society of Berlin merchants and manufacturers complains that the United States custom officials arbitrarily raise invoices without regard to the prices paid in the country of origin, and it is claimed that the United States custom methods operate especially to the disadvantage of German manufacturers upon which a drawback has been paid. The report further asserts the price proven to have been paid in Germany should be accepted as final in the United States, and adds that the prospect for better treatment of foreign exports is very slight.

The editor of the Voerwaerts, the Socialist organ, has been acquitted of the charge of slandering the highest Saxon court. He said it was a well-known practice in the Dresden court to treat Social Democrats as possessing less rights than other citizens. A Berlin judge held that the proofs offered substantiated the statement conclusively. The reactionary press commented severely upon the decision, but all shades of liberal papers receive the decision with great satisfaction.

The Peace Conference is much discussed The fact that Dr. Zora was accompanied to Berlin from The Hague last week by Frederick Holls, secretary of the American delegation, was much commented upon. The Hamburg correspondent sees proof that the appricans at The Hague considered it important to act in harmony with the Germans, if is believed that the German government is anxious to try every practicable method with the other great powers, and especially Russia and the United States, to reach an agreement.

The Centrist leader, Herr Lieber, was called to order for a sharp arraignment of the courts for recent "monstrous decisions" against laborers, and "mildness" toward employers.

The refusal of the Reichstag on Thursday, by an immense majority, to refer the bill to a committee is equivalent to the death, in the present form, of ratification of the purchase of the Caroline, Ladrone and Pelew Islands. Three will be but little excitement. Although the Centrists polled for the purchase, their leaders spoke slightingly of the acquisition and the public shows no enthusiasm.

He was told that a repetition of the offense would result in his being punished. Washington was removed to the hospital, where his life was in the balance for some time. It is now thought that he will recover.

[A. P. EARLY MORNING REPORT.] VICTORIA (B. C.,) June 24.—In an interview, printed in a late issue of the Klondike Miner, Commissioner Ogilvie says that he never advised the imposition of royalties on the gold output. He believes that sensational reports sent out regarding the vast wealth be-Different Husbands.

[Chicago News:] There are numbers of degrees of usefulness or uselessness to be noted among the heads of house holds. There is the man who become purely ornamental after leaving busi-ness; he has nothing to do after leav-ing the office till bedtime but smoke, read and enjoy himself. After working all day he very rightly says he does not want to be bothered, and while his wife may make a bright little tale out of the delinquincies of the servants or the children to amuse him, she must not take them tragically after 6 the children to amuse him, she must not take them tragically after 6 o'clock p.m.

There is the husband who helps. Perhaps his wife is sawing off a shelf for a closet and he sees her. "Let me do that, my dear," he says; "it is not fit work for you." Very gladly she relinquishes the task and in ten minutes he is calling up the stairs, "Molly! just come and show us how the wretched thing works. I can't make it go." Or, perhaps, he thinks he can paper a room. He gets it half done, the paper crooked and in wrinkles and then he gets tired and the room remains as it is, unless his wife hires a paperhanger. It is wiser and the room remains as it is, unless his wife hires a paperhanger. It is wise not to let him do the gasfitting in your new house unless you intend to go to bed at dark, otherwise you are likely to be asphyxlated.

There is also the reckless and untidy man. In many ways he is to be preferred to the neat and fussy man, though his chiffonier drawers are always in a jumble of handkerchiefs, ties, fishing tackle, stockings and brushes. He is generally a lovable man and has plenty of willing slaves tearing around hunting up things for him.

Treacherous Filipinos and Kobbe's Bed-The Slippery "Amigo."

Bed-The Slippery "Amigo."

[Frederick Palmer in Collier's Weekly:] The Filipino "amigo" is allowed to enter our lines, but not to pass out of them (if we can help it.) Too often a hostile is an "amigo" when he can hide his gun before it is observed. Perhaps one in ten of the population which deserted the territory that we have occupied has returned. They come, men, women and children, each bearing a white shirt held aloft on a bamboo pole in token of their peaceful intentions. How many are spies and how many are not only Aguinaldo knows. It is not for American goodnature to differentiate, though gradually we are grasping certain peculiarities of the Filipino mind. The morning that we advanced on Malolos an "amigo" came trotting down the track, and soon found himself before Gen. MacArthur with an interpreter at his side.

"It told my friends that I was not

"I told my friends that I was not safraid," he said. "And I have come to you for them. Is it true that you, will kill us if we remain at our homes, as Aguinaldo says that you will? We do not like Aguinaldo, and if you won't kill us I want to go back and tell my friends to stay."

Upon being reassured, he courtesied and trotted back down the track. Just after he had entered the clump of bamboo beyond a stretch of paddyfields a volley came from it fairly into our position.

boo beyond a stretch of paddyfields a volley came from it fairly into our position.

Maj. Kobbe of the Third Artillery (fighting as infantry) is Provost Marshall of Malolos, which is as good as saying that the surface filth of the town has been swept up and dumped into the river. A Kansas man asked a private of the Third when the major was going to wash and iron the streets, and the Third Artilleryman said reform couldn't go as far as that as long as there were any volunteers around. An officer happened along at this moment and prevented an internecine combat. The major, will be remembered has having lined his men up and put them through the manual of arms after they had fought all day and lost 10 per cent. of their number. Their total loss in the field since the beginning of the war with the insurgents is 20 per cent. A Third Artilleryman is a proud being, as proud as a Kansas man.

Gen. Lawton thinks that it is wrong to loot a chicken, even though it happens to cross a soldier's path and cackles to be caught. Maj. Kobbe thinks that it is wrong for a soldier to look at a chicken, let alone loot a piece of household furniture, lest it shall excite his imagination and lead him into temptation. Recently an old wound which Col. Funston received in Cuba while fighting with Gomez began to trouble him, and his aides, who love the little man when he praises them, and love him even better when he confounds them, took it upon themselves to ask Maj. Kobbe to send a bed from a deserted house to the colonel's tent.

Inasmuch as he had brought it, the Third Artilleryman was allowed to leave it. The adjutant had almost persuaded thee clonel to have it in his tent, when suddenly he balked completely. Before rolling up in his blanket on the ground he was reconciled to it as offering a good seat during the day.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

ST. LOUIS, June 24.—Twenty thousand people saw Prince McClurg, the mighty son of Wadsworth, win the St. Louis Derby, the premier western turf event, at the Fair Grounds today. The attractive card offered by the association brought race lovers in droves. St. Louis's best society was well represented. The inner field was thrown open to the public, and there was a great concourse of people gathered. betting ring was jammed the betting was spirited. track was not fast, last night's rain leaving a heavy cushion.

Owing to their impressive performance on the local track, Streamer was made favorite and W. Overton second choice in the Derby. The local talent could see nothing but these two horses, and great bunches of money went in on them. Prince McClurg, however, did not lack friends. The Cincinnati contingent got down on him to a man, as did many others who had not forgotten his great performances in the past. The Prince was made third choice by the bookmakers at 4½ to 1.

To a fair start, Chancery took the lead, followed by Streamer and Leo Planter, the others strung out. At the quarter W. Overton assumed command, Streamer and Be True close up, the others bunched. At the judge's stand, Overton still led by haif a length, but Billy House had displaced Streamer, who led by a head. The others were stretched out for a distance of six lengths. At the three-quarters Sir Gatian and Prince McClurg made a play for the fighting leader. Frost shook up the former sharply and he responded with a great burst of speed, passing Overton as though he was anchored, and followed by the Prince, led the way into the stretch by three lengths, Streamer being half a length behind the Prince. not forgotten his great performances in

At the last sixteenth pole Southard brought Prince McClurg up with a rush, and getting on even terms with the flying Sir Gatian, a battle royal to the wire ensued. The Prince won in the last jump by a short head. Chancery came with a strong rush, and got within the money, three lengths ahead of Billy House. Sir Gatian's race stamps him as a great race horse, as he had already won an event previous to the Derby. Results:

[ASSOCIATED PRESS MIGHT REPORT.] NEW YORK, June 24.-The $20,000 Great Trial stakes for two-year-olds was the attraction at Sheepshead to-day, and drew a large attendance. There was little delay at the post. Virginia Earle and Mermerist, were first Virginia Earie and Mermerist were first to get out of the bunch, and they ran locked to the turn into the main track, when Mesmerist went to the front, leaving the filly as if she had been standing still. Erwin then made a bid for honors, and ran into second place for a time, but she soon fell back among the half dozen of possible place horses. Today there was a parade, in which all the Elks' heads, which entered into competition for a diamond medal, appeared on floats. There were 1200 of these heads, the largest being owned by B. E. Harris of Butte City, Mont. All the members of the order marched behind the procession of floats.

RUPTURE SUFFERERS: I was a sufferer for many years from double rupture, and tried all kinds of trusses and treatments-worst of all, the injection-some guaranteeing to cure. I never was even helped by any of those who guaranteed to cure. Every one did nothing but lift the money out of my pockets. A last a friend of mine was CURED by Prof. Joseph Fandrey, European Specialist in Rupture Curing. Then I decided to try Prof. Joseph Fandrey, 642 South Main Street, for the last time, and the LAST TIME IT WA , TOO. Today I am well and sound and no use for a truss, even at my hard work, mining. When he examined me. I asked the Professor if he would guarantee to cure me. He said, "No"-I would have to guarantee myself by following directions. This I did, and I am now willing to put up any amount of money against any sufferer's money as a GUARANTEE that if the sufferer follows Prof. Joseph Fandrey's instructions he will be cured just as I was.

SUFFERERS, this is a WARNING from one who has had years of experience in suffering and seeking for helpl and my advice is this-LOOK CAREFULLY FOR THE CURES! Do not go where they give you guarantee, references, etc., but interview personally sufferers who have been CURED.

I am a friend to Rupture Sufferers, and can be interviewed at the Hotel de Lio : d'Or. 491, corner Arcadia and Los Angeles strects. Los Angeles, Cal.

He does not guarantee to cure, as many mush-room companies do, who start today, never show any cures, and die tomorrow. CAVITE OUTPOST (San Roque, P. J.,) April 15, 1899.—Dear "Round Robins:" As you know, I left San Francisco some time before the remainder of the battery and made the tedious trip on the transport Scandia.

Our trip between Honolulu and Manila was agreeable in many ways. We were not crowded, as the twenty-five men of Battery D, who guarded the money, had the forward part of a 450-foot ship to themselves. The firemen of the vessel were our friends, and in return for a little help in the firenom we got lee water, good coffee and sometimes our meals with the "black squad." They are hard-working mortals, these firemen. They go down in the firenoms in front of a big furnace, with the temperature above boiling point, and shovel coal, while the stokers get into the coal bunkers amid foul smells and black coal dust and heat, and pass the coal to the firemen. When they come on deck they are covered with great streams of perspiration and black, Indigo, charcoal, negro dirt and dust. I wish I had some real black words to describe them. They are hot and tired out. No wonder they drink and carouse when ashore, but a kinder lot of men, and a joilier lot of comrades I never found. We had boxing every day, and some days storms, once a waterspout and a badly-scared butcher, and days and days of staring ahead of us over the dark blue ocean, with its millions of flying fish, and nights of lying on our backs and watching the stars through the rigging as it swayed back and forth, any inally—"Land ahead."

Land seemed good to look at. Sloping mountains to our left, covered with dark green trees. Straight ahead of us was a high peak with a lighthouse on top; to the right a channel, and then the end of a neck of land. Manila Harbor entrance! Just inside is where the Olympia steamed up to the Maria Christina and threw a ball of hot iron into her, and then the battle of Manilla Bay was fought, and now we were going up the bay beyond Cavite, and all

Just imagine how proud I felt of Dewey and America—our country. We lay in the stream all night, and I slept on the deck with very little clothing and no blankets. Next morning we began preparations for unloading the cargo upon cascos, a sort of soow about thirty-five feet long, ten feet wide and ten feet deep. Both ends are square and stick out of the water like a canoe or a rocker.

A native family lives on one end of every casco, and I had some opportunity of seeing the natives in their own element. The men were mostly bare legged and bare armed, brown as Chinese pottery, and muscled like little glants. They are small like Japs, and somewhat resemble them. Their hair is straight, and most of them seem very intelligent. There was a young married couple in the casco nearest us, and from the actions of the bride and groom, we boys got the impression that the people must be like their native monkeys. You know how they act—very affectionately.

The little boys climbed over the side of our vessel in their natural garments, and begged hard tack, bits of bacon, and other eatables. We dressed some of them up in our old shirt collars, etc., and they wore them very proudly for several days. One old man insisted on patting my arms and sizing me up, exclaiming "mucho fuerte!" (Very strong.) He knew the native manual of arms and insisted on drilling for me with a broom-stick. I gave him my gun, and we cut some shines about the deck. He was frien lly with me because of my red cross badge, which he took for a cross of the church.

After landing in Cavite we were installed in comfortable quarters, and

After landing in Cavite we were in-stalled in comfortable quarters, and stalled in comfortable quarters, and given a grand reception by the fifty boys who came on the first expedition. Here we were for three months partolling the town and guarding the prisoners. Cavite is on a small island, or rather a peninsula, since the spit has been joined to the mainland by a filled-in causeway. The town, like many of those about here, is full of square, tile-roofed brick buildings, that show the effect of severe rainstorms and old age. There are a number of large stone monasteries, nunneries and churches that stand, to me, a type of large stone monasteries, nunneries and churches that stand, to me, a type of the Spanish kingdom itself.

I made some friends among the Spanish soldiers that were brought from Guam Island, and found them much more intelligent that the Phillippines, hence more reserved and courteous. Mest of them were drafted into the Spanish army, and all showed the sad havoc that the climate had played with their health. One young fellow, nincteen years old, pale and thin, said he had served one year in his company, and had two more to serve. He could hardly understand the meaning of the word "volunteer." When it was explained to him and his companions, he smiled incredulously, and some of his friends laughed outright. The laugh was bitter, though. Some of them had been from from lonely mothers, others from homes of luxury, and not long since one of their number had been run through the body by an officer's sword for failing to salute. Can you wonder that our hearts warmed toward the little sallow-faced, misled Spanish soldiers, or that some of them became anxious to go to America with us?

The climate here seems beautiful, and no one complains much during the daytime, but at night the mesquitoes worry you, and in the morning you wake up with a big head. Perhaps your feet are swollen, sometimes it's your face, or around your eyes. Then once in a while you have the fever, or perhaps the fellow next to you has it. Dysentery has carried a few off, and smallpox has taken two lowa lads. They are burled in San Roque.

Last night we had our first real hard thunder shower. It thundered harder and closer to my head than I ever knew it to do at home. The lighting flashed so brightly as to blind a fellow for several seconds afterward, and the rain came down in torrents. We were well protected, however, having moved a lot of bamboo houses out to our line. I know you have read all about the fighting about Manila and Malolos. The fighting flas all been in that direction, and we have had no chance to go over there. We are south of Cavite on sible. We are having a lovely time camping

A Gun That Will Throw More Than a Ton of Metal Sixteen Miles.

[Washington Times:] When 13-inch guns were made for the navy it was believed that the limit had been reached in the heavy rifles and that ordnance larger and heavier than this was neither desirable nor necessary for warships or coast defences. There must always be a limit to the weight of heavy rifles on warships, but there is no restriction on guns placed in shore batteries. In a few months the largest gun ever made in this country will be in place and ready for testing at the proving station. Sandy Hook. This enormous weapon is a 16-inch rifle, three calibers larger than any gun of modern design previously made for either army or navy.

The 12-inch army gun is about 37 feet long and weighs 52 tons, while the weight of the projectile is 1000 pounds, and its muzzle energy is about 36,671-foot tons. The new 16-inch rifle is about 50 feet long and weighs about 125 tons. The projectile will weigh 2400 pounds, and have a velocity of about 2200 feet per second, while the muzzle energy will be about 84,009-foot tons, which is equivalent to the ramming energy of the battleshp Oregon moking at a speed of about fourteen knots an hour. This has not been the case with "Kohler." His reputation for honesty and straightfoward business dealings are well known. He has firmly ingratiated himself in the confidence of the people, and the case with which he demonstrates his ability to accomplish even more than he claims has made him famous throughout Southern California. Style to make them attractive. By treating our customers fairly we gain and hold their confidence. Deception and questionable methods are never indulged in here. With a reputation such as this we ask a chance to make you one of our patrons. Will you test the truthfulness of our claims?

Men's Full Dress Suits.

The folly of going to a merchant tailor for dress suits is fast dawning upon our fashionable dressers. We show suits that are equal in every respect to those turned out by to-order tailors-at about one-half their prices, as follows:

Coats and Vests $25 Men's High-grade Tuxedo Men's Full Dress Coats and Vests.....

Men's Prince Albert Suits.....$20 to $35

These Suits will satisfy the most critical buyers. They are made of the finest fabrics and are better in fit and style than the average tailor would be likely to make to your order.

Men's Furnishings.

The phenomenal growth of this department does not come by accident. It is the natural result of a careful study of the wants of our customers, and the exclusion of everything of a doubtful value. We buy the best that can be bought, and have much of our stock made to our order. In the matter of Neckwear, Fancy Shirts and Fine Underwear, we claim to carry the best stock in the city, . and when you consider Quality, our prices are the cheapest. Step in and we can interest you.

Double-breasted Serge Suits.

This style is more than ever popular this season, and we have prepared for an unusual demand. We show by far the largest assortment and best made Serge Suits yet brought out. the police, was raided about 2:30 o'clock this morning by Sergt. Smith and several police officers.

The club raided is the one conducted by Simpson, the colored politician, and is a resort for men and women of the lowest classes of all nationalities. The club has a charter from the State, and sells fluor to its members; every one who passes the doorkeeper and writes his name on the club register being a member. Gambling, drinking and orgies, called for courtesy dancing, have been carried on without molestation for so long that the club managers and patrons did not anticlpate trouble from the officers, consequently when Sergt. Smith and his men swooped down upon them this morning, they were nearly paralyzed with amazement.

There were about seventy-five prisoners in the bunch, men and women, and it kept the patrol wagon busy for some time removing them to the City Jail. Clerk Gridley was kept busy until nearly daylight in registering the crowd on the police blotter, and nearly succumbed from writer's cramp before the last name was booked.

To Rupture Sufferers.

Hoping to save rupture sufferers from torture, such as I have en-dured. I state my experience. I have have worn the Marsh, Sherman, Bartlett, Pomeroy and Triumph Trusses; used almost every kind of Truss known to the druggist; have taken numerous treatments and had "cures guaranteed" by physicians and specialists; in short. have tried almost every treatment under the sun; have spent thousands of dollars in search of cure, even going so far as to take fifty injections from two physicians in Los Angele. This I feel was the worst thing I could have done This I feel after this injection treatment; I was indeed a lest man, and felt they had only brought me nearer the grave. Sufferer, you may be sure that after spending from three to five thousand dollars and thirty years of torture I had no faith in any one and no hope of ever being cured or even relieved.

For a number of years I have been interested in gold mines, and knew my pariner to be a sufferer from double rupure, as well as myself. Some time ago this partner, even though working hard in our mines, was entirely cured by Prof. Joseph Fandrey, European Spe cialist in Rupture Curing, No. 642 South Main street, our city.

This gave me a slight hope that I might be able to get a little relief (my case I knew to be incurable.) When the Professor examined me he shrugged his shoulders and aid: "You are the king of rupture sufferers, and cure I cannot today promise you, but I can give you relief and comfort." This was the glorious news to me, and within two weeks I was able to travel and oversee my business, and had such relief and comfort as I had not known in thirty years before.

Today, judging from my feelings, I believe I am almost cured, and shall soon be able to give the Professor a voluntary testimonial of my entire cure. Since I have been under Prof. Fandrey's treatment I have had oppote tunity to talk with a number who have been cured, and learned of hundreds of others, and know that Los Angeles should be proud of a specialist wio is actually curing rupture and saving so many from torture. Any sufferer wishing further information on this subject call or address

MRS. BUBACH ACCUSES A NEIGHBOR

She Brings Suit Against Mrs. Crump for Damages - Alleged Poison Was Spread for the Bubachs' Pigeons, They Say-Gold Ore and

PASADENA, June 24.-[Regular Cor-PASADENA, June 24.—[Regular Cor-respondence.] The dangers of retali-ation against your neighbor's chickens, dogs, cats or pigeons, though they may have marred the beauty of your lawn, destroyed the equanimity of your flower beds or pecked away the symmetry of your disposition, is il-lustrated by a unique lawaut filed tolustrated by a unique lawsuit filed to-night by George M. and Minnle C. Bu-bach against Edward S. and Dalsy Crump, all of this city. The plaintiffs allege in their complaint that Mrs. Bubach was poisoned and damaged in health by strychnine spread by Mrs. Crump for the Bubachs' pigeons; and they claim compensation in the sum of $299, the largest amount for which a suit can be brought in the Record-of $299, the largest amount for which a sult can be brought in the Recorder's court.

The parties to this action live on Hull street, near each other, Mrs. Crump being locally identified with a paroquet which rides around on her wheel and takes an occasional trip to Los Angeles on her wrist. The plaintiffs set forth that they used to keep a large flock of pigeons, which seemed to give some annoyance to their neighbors, and they were killing them off as fast as they could take care of them. But they declare that the said Daisy Crump sought to expedite matters by sprinkling poisoned wheat where the pigeons would pick it up; that on the "18th day of May, 1899, she put out poison where the pigeons would get it, not caring what other damage might result therefrom: that said pigeons did eat said poison and carried the same to their squabs." It chanced that some of these squabs were killed for dinner, and were eaten by members of the Bubach family and by guests at their table, "all of whom were made violently ill by poison in the squabs." Mrs. Bubach fared the worst, she alleging that she suffered great bodily pain and was weakened in body—to the tune of $299. It is claimed that several pigeons dropped dead the same day, from the results of the poison, the whole mischief being traceable to the act of the defendant in strewing deadly wheat around where anybody or anything could pick it up.

On account of the serious nature of the allegate the case will be vigit up.

On account of the serious nature of the allegations, the case will be vigorously fought. The defendants claim that they are misrepresented and that the suit is brought out of spite. All the people involved are of good standing in the community, and the case will cause a sensation.

MINES AND SNAKES.

J. A. Shelhamer and F. J. Eddy of this city returned today from a frip to the Mountain Beauty gold unine on the southern border of Riverside county, which a Pasadena company is operating. They brought home the hides of six rattlesnakes, of divers colors, a good assortment of many-hued snake stories, and a collection of ores which they show with pride. The company is now running a buble shift at the mine and piling up a big dump. On Monday they will commence running out ore on a new ore car from a tunnel 150 feet deep with an ore body of four to five feet. The managers claims that the ore from this tunnel averages $18.75 per ton.

During their trip, Messrs. Shelhamer and Eddy secured rights to a stream of 400 inches of water and to a mill site not far from their present camp, In the fall they will erect a 20 or 30-stamp mill and will bring their power by electricity from the stream to the mill, a distance of a little over four miles.

ANOTHER WATER WAR ON WITH THE RIALTO PEOPLE

City Trustees Hold an Emergency Session - Drastic Measures to Prevent a Water Famine-Fire in the Tenderloin District.

SAN BERNARDINO, June 24.— [Regular Correspondence.] It was thought that the water troubles between the city and the Rialto Water Company had been smoothed over, temporarily at least, until last evening, when a telephone message from Wil-liam Starke, zanjero at the city reservoir, informed Trustee Hanford that the Rialto people had turned fifty inches of the city's water, which they had agreed to deliver through their pipe line, into the sand, and that only about three feet of water remained in the reservoir.

The Board of Trustees soon after-The Board of Trustees soon afterward met in special session. City Engineer Pope stated that the city's new flume would be completed some time today. At the suggestion of City Attorney Haskell, a resolution was passed authorizing the immediate commencement of a suit against the Rialto people to restrain them from interfering with the city water. In view of the imminence of a water famine it was decided to suspend street sprinkling for the present, and to interdite the sprinkling of lawns.

ANNUAL MUSTER AND INSPECTION OF CO. B, N.G.C.

Col. Berry Comments on the Appearance of the Company-Plans Progressing for the July Flesta at Tin Juana-J. D. Spreckels Sued on Eight Different Counts,

Correspondence.] The annual muster and inspection of Co. B, Seventh Regiment. N.G.C.. was held last night at the Second-street armory under the di-rection of Col. John R. Berry. Col. Berry was assisted by Maj. C. T. Meredith of Gen. Last's staff. Fifty-two men responded to their names, while eighteen names received no response. Capt. Dodge was greatly annoyed by the number of absentees. It is the cap-tain's intention to drop the men at the earliest possible moment, not even giv-ing them the benefit of being voted out of the company. The Colonel spoke in a very complimentary manner of the company books, and in a way excused the large number of absentees, saying that he found like conditions in many of the places he visited. This inspection is the first held since the regiment was mustered out last fall at Los Angeles, and the last to be held at the old armory. The work of moving to the new quarters in the Naval Reserve Armory on Eighth street will be begun on Monday next.

It is claimed that the Coronado Electric Railway which runs through a strip of land in the center of Orange avenue, decided to have a curb on each side of the right-of-way and to assess the property fronting on the street for the improvement. The bonds for the work were purchased by Spreckels, and a charge from $150 to $250 was assessed against each for to cover the amount of the bods. Mr. Spreckels made the purchase of the lots at the Tax Collector's sale to protect his interests. The plaintiffs aver that the proceedings in connection with the assessment and subsequent sale were illegal and void, and ask for the restraining action of the court.

Roll of Honor.

BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LAS VEGAS (N. M.,) June 24.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Col. Theodore Roosevelt, the crowning attraction of the Rough Riders' reunion, arrived this afternoon, escorted by a committee that had met him far up the Santa Fé Railroad. "I'd have been at this reunion if I had to have to walk and the meeting had been in Alaska," he announced. In Las Vegas he was met by Gov. Otero of New Mexico and Gov. Murphy of Arizona, both of whom extended to him the warmest greetings to the

him the warmest greetings to the Southwest. As escort to the colonel came Lieuts, Ferguson and Goodrich, and Sergt. C. E. Knoblauch of New York, and Capt. Day of Indian Territory. He was especially delighted by the greeting extended at Wagon Mound, N. M., where several score of children, all of Mexican blood, waived American flags as they sang in curiously pitched voices the hymn, "America." In Las Vegas, the popular air, sounded by a half-dozen bands, was "A hot time in the Old Town Tonight."

The soldiers of the regiment were de-lirious in their enthusiasm over their old commander, and could scarcely be stilled so that the regular business of the association could proceed at the operahouse. The colonel's speech was in his happiest mood. He especially congratulated his men on the way in which they had so uniformly settled down to the vocations of peace.

One of the many laughable episoder of the afternoon was furnished by Sergt. Sherman Bell, who had arisen to second a nomination, but who strayed from his text to say that the only politics of the regiment was sim-ply "Roosevelt," and "Why," said he, "I met a duffer up in Colorado who said something about the colonel I didn't like; I biffed him in the eye on the

A lasting tribue of the regiment's af-fection for their old leader was his elaction to the office, created by an un-expected resolution, of Permanent Honorary President of the Rough Riders' Society. Col. Roosevelt was deeply affected by the way the resolu-tion was passed with a cowboy howl of acquiescence, and could only bow his thanks.

Another feature that will be in the pature of a surprise to him, will be the presentation to him of a magnifi-cent badge of the Rough Riders' Society, diamond-studded and engraved, a gift of the people of New Mexico. To Lieut.-Col. Brodle will go an elaborately-engraved saber.

The election resulted in the reëlection of of President Brodie. The vice-presidents are Capt. W. H. Liewellyn, chairman of the New Mexican Reception Committee, and Lieut. David Goodrich, of Ohio, captain two years ago of the Harvard collegiate boat crew; Lieut. W. H. Dane of New Mex-

The only other honorary members are Capt. McCormick of the Seventh Cavalry, Lieut. Parker of the Twenty-fifth Infantry and Richard Harding Davis, war correspondent. The next reunion will be somewhere in Oklahoma, whose claims were elo-quently pressed by Sergt. Hunter of D Troop, Colorado Springs and San Antonio were also solicitous of the honor

The Resolutions Committee was given the task of putting a quietus on the scheme of having the regiment in Chicago in October. It is assured that no official sanction will be given the idea. Among the resolutions that will be passed will be one expressing the appreciation of the regiment to Mrs. J. Election of Officers and Other Matters-Gov. Roosevelt's Address.
[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.] LAS VEGAS (N. M.,) June 24.-The ousiness meeting of the Rough Riders Regimental Association was held in the Duncan Operahouse. Owing to the absence of Secretary Carter of Prescott, Lieut. William E. Dame of Santa Fé was chosen seeretary pro tem. An address of welcome on behalf of the citizens of Las Vegas was made by A.

A. Jones, a prominent attorney of this place. He said in conclusion: "We are more than grateful to have assembled here from the various States assembled here from the various States and Territories this happy throng who join us in this first annual reunion."

Col. Roosevelt responded as follows, his remarks at times being enthusiastically applauded:
"Just at this time I would not have left New York State for any purpose save to attend the reunion of my old regiment, and for that purpose I would

"Let me say a word of these to whom our thoughts should turn at such a time, both among the living and among the dead, to our absent living comrades, and especially to our former commander, now Maj.-Gen. Leonard Wood. We send to them the heartlest and most loyal greeting. But when we come to speak of our dead comrades, of the men who gave their lives in the jungle fighting, or who wasted to death in the fever camps, we can only stand with bared heads and pray that we may so live, so at the end to die as worthily as these our brothers died. Allyn Capron in the sunny prime of youth, in his courage, his strength and his beauty; 'Bucky' O'Neill, than whom in all the army there breathed no more dauntless soul—of these and other gallant comrades, the men who carried the rifles in the ranks, all we can say is that they proved their truth by their endeavor that in the hour of the nation's need, these rose level to the need and gallantly and cheerfully gave to their country the utmost that any man can give—their lives, for we read in the Holy Writ 'that greater love hath no man than this, to lay down his life for a friend.' And these men so loved their country that they gallantly gave their lives, for her honor and renown and for the uplifting of the human race. Now their work is over, their eyes are closed forever, their bodies moulder in the dust, but the spirit that was in them cannot die, and it shall live for time everlasting.

"So much for our comrades of the regiment. Let us not forget our comrades who this summer are facing all that we faced last summer. Let us not forget our comrades who this summer are facing all that we faced last summer. Let us not forget our comrades who this summer are facing all that we faced last summer. Let us not forget our comrades who this summer are facing all that we faced last summer. Let us not forget our comrades who this summer are facing all that we faced last summer. Let us not forget our comrades who the members themselves, but the country at large.

"I am proud of you because you never complained and never filinched. When you went to war you knew you would not have an easy time; you expected to encounter hardships, and you took them without a murran. You were all readiness to learn and to show that readiness to learn and to show that readiness to learn and to show that sible to turn the American volunter's soon into a first-class type of fighting man. Of those of our number who landed for the brief campaign in the tropical midsummer against Santiago, one-fourth were killed or wounded, and the remaining three-fourths were at years of the property of the prop

"Our nation must show itself great, not only in the ways of peace, but in that preparedness for war which best insures peace. We must upbuild our navy and army until they correspond to the new needs which the country will bring. Above all, my comrades and my fellow-countrymen, we must build up in this country that spirit of social and civic honesty and courage which alone can make this nation reach the highest and most lasting greatness."

There are upward of 10,000 people in the city, and great enthusiasm is shown in the proceedings of the Rough Riders. Tomorrow memorial services will be held in the morning, and the regimental review tomorrow afternoon.

LAS VEGAS (N. M.,) June 24.—At Raton, Gov. Roosevelt made a short address, recounting the deeds of New Mexico's Rough Riders, and complimenting the people of the Territory upon the reputation that Rough Riders had conferred upon it. When Roosevelt came opposite the line of Rough Riders' he commenced shaking hands with the troopers, and gave them a most cordial and sincere greeting. He remarked: "I am mightily glad to see you, boys, and to be able to be with you. I would not have missed this for anything. If the reunion had been held in Alaska, I would have gone there to see you."

Emil Steffen, the saloon-keeper with whom Rollinger left a valise and box of papers on the evening of December 16, when the murder is alleged to have occurred, said that Rollinger asked him to place the valise and papers in the vault for safe keeping, adding that he feared a fire at his house. Mrs. Sash testified that Mrs.
Follinger had told her that Rollinger had threatened to take her life, and that she feared him.

Dr. Noel, Coroner's physician, gave testimony in regard to the condition of Mrs. Rollinger's body, when found in the closet, testifying from experiments since carried on with dead bodies, to show the action of fire. The body of a woman had been placed in the furnace of a medical college, with the arms lying straight at the side, when exposed to the heat about five minutes the arms curled up over the head, in precisely the position in which Mrs. Rollinger's arms were found when her body was discovered by the firemen in the closet.

Gents: After 30days' treatment with your Comfort Truss and Aztee Comprand. I am pleased to say it has been 30 days of comfort to me. As I told you I have been ruptured 35 years, wearing many kinds of trusses—none of them helped me: most of the time it being necessary to keep the rupture up with my hand. Your truss held the rupture perfectly from the first fitting. The improvement so far in my case has been more than I expected, my age and the abuse I got from persons who claimed to cure taken in consideration. I am very grateful to you for the comfort you have given me and will heartily recommend suffers of rupture to you. Would be pleas d to answer all questions and tell of the comfort I experienced in 30 days.

ARIZONA COPPER.

GOV. MURPHY CONDEMNS ALLEGED

Claim That the Good Repute of th Territory is at Stake-Search for a Vast Hidden Copper Deposit Known to Exist.

lar Correspondence.] There has been a deal of talk lately about fake mining orations selling stock in the East, he basis of copper mines in Ari-These companies have been purchasing columns of expensive space in the New York and Boston papers, and have been filling them with the most vivid accounts of mines destined within year to return to the investor his loney several hundred fold increased. ne of the best advertisers among Arizona mining companies has been the Spenazuma Company, with properties in Graham county. This corporation has been shown in the Territorial press working a scheme that had little basis in merit. In the prospectus the mines were set forth as a Golconda, and the mineralized district owned as miles in extent. Of a verity it had little ore in and lessed overhower.

in extent. Of a verity it had little ore in and less-development.

Another well-advertised concern is the Val Verde Copper Company, which is selling stock on the basis of a number of copper claims, reported to be rich, situated in the Grand Cañon cópper district, north of Williams, and, according to the advertisements, on a direct line with the United Verde mine, of richest renown.

Concerning these two schemes Gov.

Murphy has just issued a public announcement, which he has sent to the newspapers generally. He especially gives attention to the Val Verde. Of it says, in part: It is exceedingly distasteful to me to newspapers generally. He especially gives attention to the Val Verde. Of it he says, in part:

"It is exceedingly distasteful to me to be compelled to invite public attention of affairs of this kind, and it may be that reputable citizens have given sanctions in good faith; yet it is the duty of every true friend of Arizona to fearlessly expose misrepresentations injurious to the fair name of the Territory and its business interests; and, if it is not done honest mining will suffer a backset from which Arizona will not recover for many year.

"Whereas, several prominent eastern newspapers have been induced to publish extensive notices and wildly exaggerated accounts of the value and condition of the property owned by said Val Verde Copper Company; and, whereas, such schemes work incalculable injury to the legitimate mining interests of the Territory, and are used for the purpose of obtaining money upon evident misrepresentations, and deserve the severest condemnation; "Now, therefore, I 'deem it my duty, in order to protect the good name of the Territory and the legitimate and worthy mining interests, to publicly and officially denounce such methods, and to warm investors everywhere against being deceived by this or any other stock-jobbing mining company that selects Arizona for its field of operations. The Territory abounds in mineral wealth, and no greater advantages exist anywhere for profitable mining; great fortunes are being easily and honestly made in this very honorable industry; the field is practically inexhaustible, and, no doubt, on that account schemers have been able to float bogus enterprises, aided by a booming mining stock market and the almost fabulous output of our permanently producing mines. The Val Verde Copper Company attempts to boom itself by claiming its property to be on the same vein as the great United Verde mine, when, as a matter of fact, it is a hundred miles away, and in a totally different formation; this, however, is but one of the many extravagant claims made by this company.

werde are based upon a brief report submitted to the Governor by Lestier Jackson, a northerfully declares the Grand Cañon district worthless as a mineral field.

district there is available an enormous amount of free copper ores, but that as yet there have been found no mines. Somewhere in the width of the mineralized strip there must be a mother lode of "blow-out," through which the mineralized strip there must be a mother lode of "blow-out," through which the mineralized store the word that blow-out has been discovered, then there will have been found one of the greatest copper mines of the world. Yet this great lode may be concealed down in the sandstone, 800 feet below, where the lime carbonate capping ends. It may never be found. In these days, however, there appears to be an opportunity, under honest and skillful management, for profit in the extraction of the surface copper ores. The work would be the despair of the lode miner, familiar only with the conventional shafts, drifts and stopes.

If the Santa Fé and Grand Cañon Railroad be constructed, it will pass through this mineralized belt, and afford cheap transportation for the ores to reduction works. Without such transportation very little can be done. There is in the air a rival railroad scheme to that which has started work at Williams. A railway promoter named Woodward, a Los Angeles man, has lately been on the ground with Passenger Agent Byrne of the Santa Fe at Williams. A railway promoter named Woodward, a Los Angeles man, has lately been on the ground with Passenger Agent Byrne of the Santa Fé Pacific and Assistant Passenger Agent C. A. Higgins of the Santa Fé, the latter he who attends especially to the advertising of the line, and whose glowing descriptive writings have served to bring many tourists to the Grand Cañon. It is claimed at Ash Fork that Woodward's scheme has been approved by the Santa Fé, and that he has been assured a traffic guarantee of $30,000 a year. The road is to start from Ash Fork, and to be pushed through to the cañon at the head of the Bass trail, undeniably one of the grandest points of observation along the gorge. The line, starting at Ash Fork, would practically be an extension of the Santa Fé, Prescott and Phoenix Railroad. It would be especially convenient for tourists into the wonderful and little-known valley of Cataract Creek.

ALBUQUERQUE (N. M.,) June 22.—[Regular Correspondence.] The river is reported higher at Laredo than it has been for forty years. From El Paso to Albuquerque the Rio Grande presents the melancholy sight of a river running bottom up. There are plenty of noble reaches and graceful bends, but no water. The reason is the lack of spring rains in the valley of the Rio Grande. Old inhabitants say that big snows in the winter at the head of the river do not indicate abundant water further down its course unless there are the usual spring rains. Sentiment is strengthening throughout the Rio Grande Valley that Federal storage reservoirs are a crying need. It is believed that impartial distribution of the water would not result from State control, of the irrigation systems, and that the national government must take held.

The decision of the Supreme Court in the Elephant Butte dam case was a disappointment to the people of Las Cruces, but they hope the dam will eventually be built. LIGHTING SYSTEM GIVES WAY FOR ANOTHER ISSUE.

School Bond Election to Be Called Early as Possible-Maximum of Waterworks Bonds Fixed Upon.

Mrs. Boyce Claims to Have Beer and is Suing Her Ejector, gation-F. D. Black, the Coursing Man, Given a Fine-Traction Company Sued.

The proposition to issue bonds for a municipal distributing system for street lighting has been abandoned for the present by the Gas and Light Committee of the Council, and instead of combining that issue with one of the proposed issues of school improvement bonds, the school bonds are to be submitted to the people as soon as pos-sible. It has been found that this can be done without exceeding the $2,000,-000 limit, provided by the charter, and therefore these bonds will be voted upon before the waterworks bonds are submitted to the people. The reason for this action is that the committee considers school improvement of greater importance than any question of municipal lighting. The bid of the present lighting contracting company is to be accepted.

The coming issue of waterworks bonds is not to exceed $2,100,000, that limit having been placed upon the proposed issue by the Water Supply Committee yesterday. The ordinance of intention for this bond issue will be adopted by the Council tomorrow.

A special meeting of the Council will be held next Friday for the purpose of adopting the final ordinance calling a special election to vote on the proposed school bonds. It is almost certain that an opportunity will be given the people to vote separately upon the grammar school and High School issues.

All the personal property taxes of the national banks oft he city have been paid. The City Assessor has not come to an agreement with the other banks week.

As a result of the agitation of the question whether the eight-hour law applies to the police, it is probable that the Council may take action which will result in a reduction of the salaries of patrolmen and an arrangement of a schedule which will provide for paying them for just what work they perform.

The wheelmen of the city, through the officers of the various cycling organizations, propose to submit to the City Council a bicycle ordinance which will not only protect pedestrians if enforced, but will give the wheelmen the protection they have often demanded from the municipal authorities.

E. W. Sargent alleges that he employed W. A. H. Conner to make maps for him in the County Recorder's office for the purpose of starting an abstract office. IMPORTANT MODIFICATIONS OF SEVERAL BOND PROPOSITIONS.

Electric Distributing System Abanmum of the Water-bond Issue

mark, and the question arose whether it would be better to combine one of the proposed school-bond issues with the lighting bonds, or drop the lighting bonds and proceed with the school bonds. The lighting proposition was acknowledged to be very tempting to the city on account of its supposed advantages over a continuation of the present system of contracts from year to year, but the point was made that the question of proper school facilities was by far more important than that of street lighting.

For more than two weeks the members of the Council had been trying to settle the question. More lobbying was done by friends and foes of the various propositions than on anything that has done by friends and foes of the various propositions than on anything that has engaged the attention of the Council for years. Upon the point that nothing must be done which would in any way handicap or complicate the coming issue of waterworks bonds, all of the Councilmen were agreed, but they could not easily agree upon how to divide the present difference between the bonded indebtedness of the city and the $2,000,000 limit. While ordinances of intention for both the lighting and the the $2,000,000 limit. While ordinances of intention for both the lighting and the school bonds had been adopted it was realized that one or the other of these ordinances must be abandoned.

ordinances must be abandoned.

The Gas and Light Committee took up the lighting question again yesterday morning, the members realizing that something had to be done at once if at all. The time for the adoption of the ordinance of intention for the waterworks-bond election had arrived, and there could be no delay. The committee was loath to abandon a proposition upon which it had expended so much time and labor, and which had the appearance to them of being so favorable to the city's interests, but it was either the abandonment of that or the abandonment of that or the abandonment of that or the abandonment of the proposed school-bond issues, which might mean the defeat of the lighting proposition at the poils so the lighting proposition at the poils so the lighting bonds were given up. The committee then discussed the question in all of its phases yesterday morning, and then prepared the following report, which shows the reason for their action:

"Recognizing the paramount importance of the municipal ownership of a water system, and being advised from the opinion of the City Attorney, heretofore filed with the City Council, that an issue of bonds for a lighting system at the present time, if an issue for school purposes is also made, might involve the issuing of bonds for a water system in litigation, and further recognizing that more school facilities are involve the issuing of bonds for a water system in litigation, and further recognizing that more school facilities are essential to the welfare of our city and at present of greater importance than the construction of a light distributing plant, your committee takes this opportunity of recommending to you that you discontinue the present proceedings for voting bonds for a light distributing system. We would further recommend that upon your discontinuing the proposed bonding you that you discontinue the present proceedings for voting bonds for a light distributing system. We would further recommend that upon your discontinuing the proposed bonding plan, you accept the bid of the Los Angeles Electric company,-under specifications 'A' heretofore made you, and that the City Attorney be instructed after July I prox., to draft the necessary contract for that purpose with said Los Angeles Electric company."

It was stated that this action does not necessarily mean the total abandonment of the lighting proposition, but the effect of it is to make that proposition the subject upon which a judicial decision of the terms of the charter shall be secured if it is necessary to secure such a decision. The city has never officially admitted that the word "or" in the charter referring to water or sewer bonds being issued in excess of $2,000,000 means that only one or the other kinds of bonds may be issued above that limit, and that question remains to be stitled.

The question of what to do with the school-bond proposition was in the hands of the Finance Committee, and as soon as that committee was informed of the step taken by the Gas and Light Committee it was decided that the proper course to pursue is to let the school-bond matter take its regular course. That is that when the ordinance of intention goes into effect, tomorrow afternoon, to follow it with the final ordinance calling the election. For this purpose it is the intention of the Council to hold a special meeting Friday morning. This final ordinance and the formal official notice of election must be published, one for two weeks and the other for ten days, so that the earliest possible date for the school-bond election will be twenty-four days after next Friday. If the final ordinance is promptly approved by the Mayor the election may be held four days after next Friday. four days after next Friday. If the final ordinance is promptly approved by the Mayor the election may be held on July 25. Unless present plans are changed the school-bond electio; will be held before the election for waterworks bonds.

President Silver was asked yesterday whether the disposition of the various proposed bond issues as mapped out by the committees would be approved by the Council.

whether the disposition of the various proposed bond issues as mapped out by the committees would be approved by the Council.

"I can not tell you," he replied.
"There seems to be a difference of opinion among the members in regard to the school and lighting bonds, some contending that the grammar school and lighting bonds shall be submitted, omitting for the present the High School bonds. As for myself, I have come to the conclusion that inasmuch as it is asserted that the amount of all the bonds would exceed the amount authorized by the charter, preference should by all means be given to the school bonds. I am, however, in favor of segregating the grammar from High School bonds. The waterworks bond ordinance will undoubtedly be adopted on Monday."

Chairman Toll of the Finance Committee has figured that it will not be necessary to reduce the estimate for school improvment purposes $20,000 fin order to keep within the $2,000,000 limit. He bases this opinion on the following bond statement:

According to the report of the City Auditor, made public last Tuesday, the bonded indebtedness of the city at the presented for payment. This makes the net bonded indebtedness of the city at the presented in bonds will be $1,512,270, of which $7000 is due and is unpaid only because the bonds have not been presented for payment. This makes the net bonded indebtedness of the city at the present time $1,605,700. On July 1 there will be due, and the money is in the treasury to make the payments, $32,425, so that after this amount has been paid the debt of the city as represented in bonds will be $1,573,275. If to this is added the proposed issue of $42,000 of school bonds (which is the total amount asked for by the Board of Education,) the total indebtedness of the city and the charter limit will be greatly increased before the waterworks bonds cannot be authorized, issued and sold before the middle of October. 'On August 1, $250 will be paid creased by just the amount of the defeated issue. Some of the Councilmer contend, however, that after the waterworks bonds are issued it will be impossible for the city to vote more bonds until some issue expires, and this is urged as an added reason for supporting the school bonds, as this may be the last opportunity in years to vote them.

Signed Yesterday and Ample Bonds Given by Contractor.

The contract between the city and Henry Aufdenkamp for the construc-tion of twelve new engine-houses has been signed. It contains every safe guard possible for the protection of the city. It had been expected that one of its provisions would be for a penalty of a given amount for each day after the expiration of the contract time limit that the houses were not completed. An effort was made to induce W. E. Thornton to agree to such a provision when it was supposed he would get the contract, but he refused. The City Attorney found that it would be impossible to provide such a penalty without also giving the contractor the benefit of a reward clause; that is, allowing him a bonus equal to the penalty for each day saved by him from the contract time limit. The Supreme Court has held that one provision cannot be made in a contract without the other. after the expiration of the contract provision cannot be made in a contract without the other.

As to payments for the work as it proceeds, the contract provides that the Building Superintendent and supervising architect shall on each Thursday after the work begins, make an estimate of the value of material actually used, and the cost of the work actually performed, and report the same in writing to the Finance Committee. That committee will then allow demands for 70 per cent. of the amount reported, the remaining 30 per cent. being retained by the city. On all questions on which the contractor and supervising architect cannot agree the judgment of the Building Superintendent shall be final.

ing Superintendent shall be final.

Accompanying the contract are two bonds, with the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland as sureties. One bond is for $23,475, 50 per cent. of the contract price, and is for the protection of mechanics, laborers, who are employed on the buildings, and those who furnish material for their construction. The other bond is for 25 per cent. of the contract price, and is for the protection of the city in the contract. The contracts and bonds will be presented in the City Council tomorrow for approval.

Preparing Their Estimates.

City Auditor Carson has sent to all the heads of city departments notices reminding them of the provision of the city charter, which requires them to submit to him, by July 15. estimates of their expenses and financial needs for the coming fiscal year. After these estimates are filed the Auditor has authority to make such changes in them as he thinks necessary, being guided by the prospective condition of the funds and the relative size of the several estimates. That there will be a great reduction in the amounts allowed to some of the departments as compared with last year's apportionments, is certain, but just where the pruning process will be most in evidence will not be known until the Auditor and Finance Committee prepare the final estimates. the heads of city departments notices

The weekly trial balance of the City Auditor, completed yesterday, shows a balance of nearly half a million dol-lars in cash in the hands of the City Treasurer, but owing to recent drain some of the more important of the funds are on the debit side of the ledger. For the first time in nearly a year there is a small balance to the year there is a small balance to the credit of the dog fund. I do not mean to increase the salaries, but suppose we reduce the salaries of policemen to a stated amount for eight hours' work for simple patrolling, them we will have a margin upon which we can pay extra for extra services. And I do not think the extra work complained of is really extra work—and still make their maximum salaries not greater than what is at present allowed them. The city would profit by such a system, and the police would have no cause for complaint for they would be simply paid for just the work they performed. I am of the opinion, in fact I am certain, that the Council will take up this matter after the beginning of the new year, and will so adjust salaries as to put an end to these complaints. The city might save money thereby, and who knows but what it would be possible to increase the force on the saving made."

Complete Series of Oriental Remedies Prepared for Home Treatment-New Cures for All Diseases Without Physicians-A Distinct Novelty in America-Remedies New to the Whole World in Their Present Form-Perfected Through the Skill and Enterprise of Dr. T. Foo Yuen, Bringing the Incomparable Herbai Treatment Within the Reach of All.

A NEW TREATISE ON "THE PRACTICE OF ORIENTAL MEDICINE"

A distinctly new form of medical | has prepared and published a new treatment is today, for the first and elaborate volume, "The Practime, offered to the world. The tice of Oriental Medicine," in two wisdom of the far East, from which have come so many accessions to human knowledge, now places its lished by this company, together methods of healing, unrestricted, within reach of the farthest West, and the wonderful herbal riches of the Flowery Kingdom have at last been prepared in practical forms for home use without the immediate intervention of the physician.

The Foo & Wing Herb Company is a recognized institution in Los Angeles. For several years past it has worked and prospered in this city. It now numbers its patrons and friends by the hundreds. few years ago, when it was first bringing the merits of the Oriental System of Medicine before the pubic, this company published many columns in the newspapers. It has also issued several creditable volumes in book form explaining its principals and methods. For the past year it has not been heard rom so often in this way, but it has been by no means idle, dead or as e.p. On the contrary, the mem-bers of this company have been preparing to extend their business along entirely new lines. The re-sult is that a system of medicine which had its beginning four thousand years ago is now, for the first time in history, to be brought within the reach of English speaking people in forms that can be used without direct consultation with a physician. In a word, Dr. T. Foo Yuen, of he Foo & Wing Herb Company. has perfected a complete line of its incomparable remedies for home treatment. He offers more than a hundred different remedies, for the cure of all the more common ailments and diseases that afflict mankind, in forms that may be kept at home ready for emergencies, or may be used, at home, in the cure of chronic cases of disease. This has been a much greater work than would at first appear. It has required years of planning and labor and the investment of thousands of dollars. Hundreds of experiments were necessary before the desirable result sought could be achieved. All well informed chemists will tell you that the Chinese are experts in the preparation of remedial agents. But a fundamental principle of the Oriental System of Medicine is that the medicines used must not be too greatly condensed. They must be prepared in forms readily assimilated into the blood and the tissues of the body, otherwise most or all of the beneficial effect is lost. Neither can alcohol be used, as a general rule, in pre-serving them. The Chinese believe that the effect of remedies is lost by the use of alcohol, or so altered as to be injurious instead of beneficial and that the alcohol itself, in nearly every instance, is a distinct injury to a sick man.

The problems before the Foo and Wing Herb Company were therefore these: First, to condense their remedies so as to make them portable and convenient without destroying their medicinal effects, and, second, to preserve them for an indefinite period without the use of alcohol. These problems have been completely solved. The company has prepared a complete line of remedies, which will retain their medicinal powers for any length of time in any climate, which are not preserved in alcohol, yet are compact, portable and convenient. We do not propose to describe these remedies in detail here, but all who see them will admire the ingenuity

This publication contains the cream of the former books pubwith full particulars of the new method of healing, a price list and description of all the remedies and complete directions for using them, both in the cure of chronic diseases and in the prevention and cure of acute attacks, with directions for varying the treatment to meet emergencies and changes in the patient's condition, also with rules for diet and care of the body while the medicines are being used and after a cure. Anyone by a careful study of this book, and by procur-ing a few of these standard remedies, can be his own physician and cure himself with remedies which are not only harmless under all conditions but are the most potent and efficacious known, whether for acute or chronic disorders.

An Entirely New Method.

For a long time past Dr. Foo Yuen, who is the president and executive head of the Foo and Wing Herb Company, has been assisting his patrons in two ways; first, by his skillful pulse diagnosis and close attention to the difficult cases that have come to him for his personal assistance and advice, and second, by sending his remedies by mail or express to distant points and to many people whom he has never seen, in all parts of the United States and Canada. In very many instances this latter method has been entirely satisfactory to the patrons as many letters from grateful people who have been cured of long standing and troublesome diseases, abundantly testify. By this third and new method of treatment, now offered to the public, Dr. Foo is simply using his skill and experience in a new way and conferring diseases. an additional benefit upon the world by putting his remedies in a form to be more widely distributed than ever before.

Protected by Trade Mark.

Bear in mind that this departure marks an epoch in the use of internal medication for many people. It will be remembered as the first patent office at Washington, D. C., in full accordance with the laws of the United States governing trade marks and the rights secured by them. The prediction is a safe one that this trade mark will soon be known throughout the length and that these remedies will be on sale in every community of im-Dr. T. These remedies are, at present. all prepared in China, where the most skilled workmen and the best and purest herbs can be procured, A representative of the company superintends this branch of the business, residing in China and being in constant communication by mail and cable with the home office tations. There is a vast difference in the different grades of the remedial herbs grown in China as they are gathered and prepared for use. This company employs only The Foo & Wing Herb Company, the very best in the preparation of these remedies and no pains or expense will be spared in maintaining their high quality. Experts are required to secure the best herbs, just as the great tea importlittle value without the informa-tion necessary to use them intelli-tinguish the different grades and in such a way as to secure the best results.

Their Practical Use.

Those who are already familiar with these remedies as they have been used heretofore will understand without further explanation the advantages of this new system. But those who have never seen Oriental remedies will begin to inquire how they are to be procured and used. In respect to this we say that a few of these remedies, which are especially intended for use in emergencies, should be kept on hand for acute attacks. In chronic cases a more leisurely selection may be made of these remedies best adapted to the patient's condition. These medicines are all listed both by name and by number, the numbers ranging between 1 and 126. Take the remedies for colds, as examples. These are Nos. 15 and 18. If the cold commences with chills, No. 15 is the proper remedy. Very frequently a single dose of this remedy taken at night, upon retiring, when the first symptoms of a cold have been felt through the day, will break the attack up entirely and prevent its going any farther. If the attack commences with a fever, internal or external, with thirst, and a burning sensation of the skin, or a rise of temperature above the normal, as indicated by a clinical thermometer, then No. 18 is the proper remedy for immediate use. This will reduce the fever and the pain which is a result of the fever. After that is accomplished resort should be had to No. 15. In cases of la grippe where the patient has more violent symptoms, both chills and fever and also aching of the bones, nausea and all the other distressing symptoms which, owing to the ravages of this troublesome and universal disease, are familiar to almost everybody, then another remedy should be first employed. This is one of the most valuable in the list, namely, No. 38, a general vitalizer and sustainer of the forces of life. This splendid remedy removes poisons from the system and checks the development of the innumerable microbes which work the deadly injury of la grippe, pneumonia, typhoid fever and similar diseases. Following this or in connection therewith, 15 or 18 may be used, with benefit, in accordance with the symptoms of individual cases. All these matters are fully plained in the volume that has been prepared for use in connection with this series of remedies. The point to be emphasized here is that a small supply of the most important of the remedies may be kept constantly on hand for instant use at the first symptom of an acute disorder. Then, time that is simply priceless may be saved, and many a tedious, perhaps fatal, illness may be warded off at this commencement.

Every chronic sufferer is familiar with the general symptoms and conditions of his own case. Usually he has been to numerous doctors and has been treated with various remedies and methods. These have failed or his case would not be chronic. Such patients can easily select from the list here offered the remedy adapted to their condition. For instance, there are five different remedies for the diseases of vomen, four for consumption, four for cancers, three for rheumatism and seven for hemorrhoids. There are four remedies for the treatment of throat troubles, diphtheria and quinsy. These are among those that it is especially worth while to keep constantly on hand if one is predisposed to those paintul

The remedy for any disease, as rheumatism, for example, is termed the "standard remedy." Other remedies, such as those for colds and No. 38 already mentioned, or No. 37, which will remove any poison from the blood and tissues, are to be used in connection with the standard remedies to meet emergencies that may arise in the course of the treatment. The circumstances under which these are to be attempt to make these remedies used are described in the book already available for the use of the general mentioned. The reader will therefore public. This series of remedies is see that these remedies are not curefully protected by trade mark en-tered and authenticated in the work miracles, but a consistent, complete and scientific series adapted to all circumstances and equal to every ordinary case. The directions for diet and hygiene will greatly assist cures in chronic cases, especially, and are of themselves well worthy of a perusal by any invalid. It is not contended that these remedies will cure any disease in and breadth of the United States a day or a week. But it is certain that they will cure many cases regarded as hopeless if they are employed consistportance. It is the intention of ently, persistently and with ordinary care and patience.

Kidney, Liver and Rheumatic Trouble Cured

"Yes," said George S. Taber, of Santa Barbara, "I suffered from kidney, liver and rheu-matic troubles for years, and tried many physicians without obtaining relief. My trouble gradually grew worse and I had about given up when I was persuaded to consult the English and German Physicians. It was wonderful the way I improved under these great Specialists, and the improvement continued until I was entirely cured. After my experience with other doctors, and the dangerous nature of my trouble, I cannot say too much in behalf of the English and German Physicians of Los Angeles,

Disease of the Bone Cured

"Seventeen years ago I suffered from a serious disease of the hone of my leg ('mecrosis of the tibia'). I had been under the care of the best surgeons in that part of the east, but my trouble-gradually grew worse until amputation seemed my only hope of relief. My system was sornn down that it didn't seem possible that I could live through an operation. Fortunately I was advised to call on the English and German Physicians. They removed a portion of the bone, healed up the old wound and built up my health, so that my leg was sound as ever, and I have remained well ever since, and I would like to add my testimony to the big list of grateful cures that these eminent specialists have in Callfornia. Very gratefully, "JOSEPH R. MOELLER, Santa Ana, Cal."

A middle-aged woman, a pretty girl and a young man who seems devoted to her, stand in a group at the bow and wave handkerchiefs at another group standing on the levee. The swift current rushes past and gurgles loudly. The bartender is busy at a large lee box in a corner of the upper deck, putting fresh bottless the upper deck, putting fresh bottless the upper deck, putting fresh bottless of the upper deck, putting fresh bottless of the upper deck, putting fresh bottless of song as he does it. Already ming a song a song a shore with a song a song a shore which flow middle of the river, and swings slowly around, and then the puff-puff of the exhaust pipes and the chug-chug of the revolving wheel begins steadily. The spires and domes and square-cornered roofs of the city of St. Louis make a jagged sky line for miles on the shore to the right as the steamer slides past. By this time the passengers have selected their splint-bottomed easy chairs and comfortable places to sit on the forward deck. A hundred feet are cocked up on the rail, cigars are going, the bartender is getting his lamps ready to light, the card game is the full swing, and the pretty girl and the young man are cuddled into a cartier whispering together and watching the Illinois shore, a fringe of great trees that seems to slide upstream an andless panorama of green foliage.

The pilot in the wheelhouse which is perched up above the hurricane deck, between the two big smokestacks, and has on top of it a huge Cherokee Indian made of sheet iron which stands forever balancing on one moccasined foot and pointing a bow and arrow, tells the newspaper reporter beside him that over there, near the Illinois shore, is where Bloody Island was. The river has washed away now. Years ago, when most men thought it not dishonatelle to kill a man in a duel, many a luel was fought in this island. when most men thought it not dishonrable to kill a man in a duel, many a

It was on this island that Senator Phomas H. Benton killed Charles
Lucas in a duel in 1817. Benton chalenged Lucas because Lucas quesdoned his right to vote at an election.

The duel was fought at surrise. The pullet from Benton's pistol cut a vein in the neck of Lucas so that he was able to get around, as soon as he was able to get around, as soon as he was able to get around, as soon as he was able to get around, as soon as he was able to get around, as soon as he was able to get around, the hallesged him a second time. [Collier's Weekly:] Maiolos fell so the law of compensation that life in Maiolos should be hard. Three weeks ago, as you know, we walked into the rebel capital after having shelled out the trenches in front of it, and having disposed a few volleys among two or three hundred fleeing white figures on the right of the railroad track. Then the optimistic thought that the backbone of the rebellion was broken.

Then our troops looked forward to following up their victories by kurrying on to the terminus of the railroad at Dagupan, straight through the heart of the enemy's country. But we have been disappointed, both in our beilef and in our expectations. At this time we are converted to the opinion of the trooper of the Fourth Cavalry, who said, as he pleketed his horse on the outskirts of the town:

"Mebbe we've scratched the backbone a bit, but we ain't bruk it.
Breakin' won't do no good, nohow We've got to ketch that backbone and Kansas on our front at Malolos as he is keen to strike at our flanks and connections.

Three days after the Thirteenth Minnesotas had made an extensive reconnoissance from Bigaa with opposition, they were awakened at 3 a.m. to the fact that the business of guarding the railroad track was not haif as hum drum as they had supposed. Had not the armored cars been at hand their list of two killed and twenty wounded would have been doubled. Nothing could be more unfortunate than that the insurgents should become reconciled to shell and machine-gun fire. The capacity for mischief of two or three hundred black men sneaking about in the darkness requires a force almost as large as our main body at Malolos to protect its connection with its base. In order that newspaper correspondents may travel, and the army may be fed, the Minnesotas, the Oregons and others must hear Mausers punching holes in their shelter tents every might. If the Mausers get too thick the infantrymen are called out, and the drowsy fellows on the armored car fire a few shots in the direction from which the officers think the bullets are coming. Whereupon the popping of the Mausers ceases and everybody except the outposts turn in By night the outpost shoots at everything he may espy moving toward him. As a result most of the white dogs and pigs in the region have been killed or wounded.

FILIPINO IMITATORS.

They Readily Catch Up the English Words of Command.

[Omaha Bee:] Whatever may be said of Aguinaldo's nude and ragged bushwhackers: call them rebels, savages or treacherous cutthroats, as it suits the fancy; there is one admission made or treacherous cutthroats, as it suits the fancy; there is one admission made to their credit, and that is their faculty of imitation. This was remarked long before the outbreak. Their ability to grasp the rudiments of the language of the conqueror as well as of various trades was conspicuously shown in printing offices and newspapers started by Americans. In mechanical branches they had shown wonderful aptitude as pupils, becoming quite proficient in the handling of tools in a few weeks. This faculty is now turned to some account in war. Freedom of Manila relates an incident showing that the Filipinos are familiar with American army commands and sentry signals. During a fight on April 12 members of the Minnesota regiment heard commands given by the insurgents in English. One company of this regiment went to the relief of another which had been attacked at night near Bocave bridge. When it approached the bridge it was challenged in the regular American way with "Halt! Who's there?" The captain repiled. "Co. E. Thirteenth Minnesota," and instantly the command "Fire!" was heard, and a volley was poured into them from the bridge, several men being wounded. There are mand "Fire!" was heard, and a voiley was poured into them from the bridge, several men being wounded. There are among the Filipinos many officers who speak English, and they have adopted the American words of command for many things for the purpose of deceiving our troops in their night attacks, All the common commands, such as "Load," "Ready," "Aim," "Steady," "Come up on the line," "Forward," "Halt," were distinctly heard given by them by several of our outposts that were cut off that night and were able to secrete themselves very close to the Filipino lines.

GRANT NO FRANCHISES.

The last River and Harbor Bill, thanks to the untiring energy of Senator White, carried a provision for a report, with an estimate of cost, by the United States engineers, for improving the inner harbor at San Pedro. This work is in part completed, but the report of the engineers has not as yet been submitted. It will be remem bered that Col. Benyaurd considered it necessary to provide a "turning basin" in the upper part of the harbor, for his report, dated June 8, 1894, contains the following:

"Another difficulty was found with steamships. . . The space between wharves and the shallow depths pre-vented the steamships from turning easily, preparatory to departure. Were channel widened and the upper part of the inner harbor dredged this difficulty would be entirely obviated. The steamers would go to the upper part of the basin and turn readily vithout danger to vessels lying at the

It is hardly necessary to say that nothing should be done that might in any way tend to place obstacles in the way of the preparation and carrying out of these harbor plans. There are now before the Board of Supervisors two applications for wharves and one for a ferry that involve the location indicated by Col. Benyaurd as needed for navigation. The granting of these franchises might seriously affect the plans of the United States Engineers and would be likely to bring about causes of delay to improvements, similar to the delay experienced in the improvement of our postoffice, through the private interests in adjacent land needed for the purpose.

Under the circumstances, there can be no doubt that public interests would be best served by holding in abeyance all franchises at San Pedro until the United States Engineers' report shall have been made to Congress. The field is now clear for the engineers to devise economical improvements. The granting of franchises is fraught with the greatest danger of increasing materially the cost, and correspondingly increasing the labor of obtaining appropriations, and nullifying in part said to be plotting against the French the good work of our Senators and Representatives in the past. If, therefore, the Supervisors have the interests of the people at heart, they will refuse all applications for special privileges until the report of the government engineers shall have been submitted, showing the scope and character of the inner harbor improvements. Then and not until then, will it be possible to determine whether the granting of the franchises asked for would interfere with the proper construction of the inner harbor.

The Chicago Record notes that "In after years June 19 will be celebrated as the date on which men were arrested for runing an automobile in a Chicago boulevard." But the Record should cultivate patience. There was a time in Chicago when a bicycle rider had to dismount upon coming within 100 feet of a horse. Chicago will outgrow this automo prejudice just as it earned not to shy at the meek and lowly bike.

Col. Richard Henry Savage, the author of numerous lurid novels, wishes to go to the front as a brigadier-general. As it will be impossible to write novels on the firing line, the governent ought to strain a point and give the flagship eight or ten barrels of this Savage a commission. grog.

SLANDERING THE COLORED SOLDIER.

An anonymous scoundrel in San Francisco has written a letter to a newspaper of that city, in which the ssertion is made that if colored troops are sent to the Philippines they will side with the natives because of racial sympathy and to get even with white Americans who enslaved their forefathers. This is probably the most absurd fake that has been given an airing since the beginning of our trouble with the Filipinos. In the first place, the negro no more resembles the native Filipino than he does the Caucasian. The natives of the Philippine Islands come from Malay-Chinese stock and bear no resemblance either in feature or in color of the skin to the native African. Again, the negro soldier of America is as intensely American and therefore as loyal and patriotic as his pallid brother, for he is American for more generations back than many of his white neighbors who fight by his side. Wherever the colored soldier has been placed he has proven amenable to discipline, intrepid, daring, and as nervy as the pick of the troops of any country in the world. He made a record for himself in the civil war, and at San Juan Hill gave the world an exhibition of valor that was an inspiration. To say that he will be other than a brave and obedient soldier in the Philippines is vile slander-a characteristic emanation of the evil-minded and blackhearted miscreant who writes anonymous letters. The people of this nation have surpassing confidence in the integrity and loyalty of the colored sol-He is a man behind the gun who will neither dishonor them nor cast a stain upon the colors of his country's ensign.

EPIGRAMS OF PLUTOCRATS.

Some of our wealthy men are acquiring the habit of dropping into epigrams, and, incidentally, of throwing out a tub to the socialistic whale which is cavorting around the ship of state in a somewhat threatening manner, waiting for a capitalistic Jonah to be thrown overboard. Carnegie recently expressed the opinion that no man ought to die very wealthy. Havemeyer says that the protective fariff is the "mother of all trusts." And now Secretary Alger sententiously asserts that he does not believe in the concentration of wealth.

It may be permitted to us to suggest to these benevolent multimillionaires that there is an easy and expeditious way in which to avoid the concentration of wealth, or the shuffling off this mortal coil while possessed of great riches. There seems, however, to be no great rush on the part of American millionaires to follow the advice given by Jesus to the rich young man who wanted to know what he should do to be saved, and was told to sell what he had, give to the poor and follow the founder of Christianity. But, perhaps, our wealthy friends are only talking through their hats, to use a somewhat vulgar, but expressive, colloquialism. It would appear as if it would be advisable for Anna Gould Castellan (otherwise known as the Countess,) to get herself innoculated with some of her sister Helen's common sense, if the reports coming from Paris as to her behavior are to be relied upon The Castellanes, old and young, are republic, and Anna, late of the Gould her husband, but of all the conspiring Castellanes, including the old Count America is not proud of seeing one of its young women in the act of painting her extremities red and climbing poles in this outrageous manner

President Patterson of Princeton pays this tribute to Zola in his baccalaureate sermon: "Some say that Zola's novels are bad books; I do not "Some say that know, for I have not read them; but I do know that he is the champion of justice." And the great educator might well have added that a man who has shown himself as valiant and unselfish as did Zola in contending for the eternal principles of truth in the Dreyfus case, has shown that he is greate than any novelist that ever lived. It is one thing to be a brilliant man, but the truly noble man is he who suffers for his fellows. The world may well afford to take off its hat to M. Zola. Admiral Dewey was presented with 1000 pounds of tea when the Ulympla touched at Colombo in the Island of Ceylon. Our reputation as a temperance nation probably accounts for this, otherwise the Colombonians would

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch is

The reason to be advanced for the movement is the fact that the G.A.R. is in process of speedy and certain ultimate extinction by reason of having nothing to recruit from.

It is to be hoped that if any such resolution as this is presented, it may be defeated. The Grand Army of the Republic was created for a specific purpose—that of combining in a grand fraternity the loyal and charitable men who battled in the war between the States for the preservation of the American Union. To attempt to perpetuate the order by recruiting it with the young men of our later wars would be a fatal error, for those veterans who fought at Santiago and Manila and Caloocan would have, in all probability, ideas widely at variance with the veterans of the 60's regarding the civil war, and there is little doubt that o soon as they came into power in the order they would make amendments to the constitution and ritual thereof which would be entirely contrary to the sentiments and views of the men who created it and have maintained the G.A.R. as a vital force in nation for nearly forty years.

It will be the part of patriotism and wisdom to permit the Grand Army of the Republic to pass out of existence when "taps" has been sounded above the corse of the last soldier in the war for the Union, leaving the order as a heritage of blessed memory to the nation. Those veterans have filled a striking place in the history and progress of the nation. The order is unique and distinctive, and its glory should remain with the men founded it, and that this is the almost universal sentiment of those men, THE TIMES feels justified in asserting.

Their sons and their sons' sons have done a grand service in the wars through which they passed in Cuba and the far Philippines, and it is for them to establish an order of their own to the glory of their achievements and to the perpetuation of the fraternity which began upon the battlefields of '98 and '99, but let the old boys who followed the flag at Shiloh and Antietam and Gettysburg and Wilson's Creek be left to pass through the opened ranks of their juniors, a tattered remnant of that magnificent army whose feats of valor electrified the world and gave America a place in history unique in the annals of war.

Some day in the not far distant future the last veteran of that great contest will be mustered out forever. and when that day comes, let the dear old soldier be followed to the bivouad on the hillside by the boys of the "G.A.R. of 98-99," and then let the books of the G.A.R. of the 60's be closed forever, leaving the records of the fraternity as a priceless part of the history of a republic whose flag has never known defeat.

This is right in sentiment, in spirit and in reason, for:

"From the lily of love that uncloses In the glow of the festival kiss, On the wind that is heavy with roses, And shrill with the bugles of bliss, Let it float o'er the mystical ocean That breaks on the kingdom of night, Our oath of eternal devot

To the heroes who died for the right.'

THE FEMALE FORM DIVINE The new plan of drawing fashion plates from live subjects is so vast an improvement over the old style that it is a wonder that it was not adopted long ago. For one thing we now have an opportunity to convince ourselves that fashionable women-or women in fashion plates-possess feet, which was not apparent in the oldstyle cuts, where the substructure of by something which looked like a moderate-sized toe peeping out from the bottom of the skirt. The new plan also encourages us to believe that fashionable women possess larger in circumference than the neck of a gourd, which was about the size of the medial regions presented in those colored plates from Paree. The daring anatomical theorist will also be justified in guessing that the fashionable woman possesses limbs, an assumption which could not, safely made from the old-style plates, which looked like a cross between Egyptian and Chinese drawings. Apparently, family, is paying the bills, not only of the only qualification demanded of the artists-or artist, for they all seem to be from the same pencil-who is guilty of those outrages on the female form divine is that he should be entirely ignorant of anatomy, if, indeed, he ever saw a live flesh and blood woman. This is the more remarkable considering that most of these cuts originate in the gay capital of France, where live women are very much in evidence, and very plump,

It is also pleasing to note, from the ew-style fashion pictures, that the fashionable woman does not neces sarily have upon her fashionable countenance a vacant expression reminding one of the reverse side of soup plate. The change, as we have said, is a vast improvement, and will be greatly appreciated by all who desire to look upon things as they really are. [See the Magazine Section.]

The Lower California gold excite ment has scarcely collapsed before we are told of another gold discovery right in the center of the city, within a stone's throw of the Chamber of Commerce. We are not likely to see stamp mills added to the oil derricks on the western hills-not just yet, at any rate.

It looks now as if the number of visitors to the Teachers' Convention, next month, would be much larger than the early estimates. The ception Committee is large, and will work hard, but in order that full hospitality may be shown to our visitors it will be necessary for every citizen to consider himself, to some extent, as a committee of one on reception In other cities, where similar conventions have been held, citizens have done much to assist in this way, by giving private receptions to prominent delegates. It is hoped that the same will be done here, also that the various State associations will do the hospitable act to their visiting neighbors. Those who have accommodations to offer, and have not yet notified the committee, should do so at once.

Los Angeles has become a great convention city. So many different gath erings are arranged or proposed for this city that it is difficult to keep track of all of them. In addition to the meeting of agricultural college men, next month, to which reference has been made in THE TIMES, there is to be a meeting of the American Forestry Association of Los Angeles of July 19. This association deals with a subject that is of much interest to Southern California, and the delegates should receive a hearty greeting.

An Omaha Man's Doings in Court. [Omaha Bee, June 17:] In the District Court yesterday Judge Smith commenced the trial of the suit of Mrs. E. L. Bellinger against Fannie F. Collins and others. The action is to set aside a deed and secure possession of two lots in Williams's subdivision. Mrs. Bellinger alleges that last September she placed for sale with F. J. Day eighty acres of land in Pottawattamie county. He disposed of the property for $2000, this being the price she claims he represented to her at the time. Later she says she discovered that he, in reality, sold the property to one Wilson Smith for $4000. Smith paid $2000 in cash, and for the remaining $2000 deeded over the two lots which she now seeks to have the title of quieted in her. The deeds to these lots, Mrs. Bellinger claims, were made to Fannie Collins, wife of a real estate agent, who assisted Day in making the trade, whereas, she insist, they should have been by rights deeded to her, she being the owner of the land, in consideration for which they were conveyed.

More rooms than are yet registered with the local officials will be needed for the accommodation of the delegates to the N.E.A. Convention. Recent news concerning the number of visitors who may be expected, leads the local Executive Committee to be-lieve that from 1000 to 2000 more rooms than have been recorded, will be needed during the four convention days, from July 11 to 14, inclusive. It is the earnest request of the com-

Anderson, room 5. Chamber of Commerce, in person, or by postal card. The name in full, number of rooms, street number, telephone number (if any.) and price, should be stated. The price usually charged is 50 cents a day. If the rooms are offered only as a matter of public pride, and if the householder would prefer not to have them filled unless an overplus of visitors makes it necessary, he can make a note of that fact, and no one will be sent to the rooms except in case of emergency.

The volume is rich in verse and prose and contains a large amount of data relative to the school department of the city, the High School and the various societies and departments of that institution. One feature of the work which illustrates the energy of the young people who have done so much credit to the school is the liberal display of advertising pages, but the fact of which the young people feel most proud is the one that the work throughout, especially so far as the letter-press is concerned, is the product- of their own labor.

Monrovia is in line, not only with a Fourth of July celebration, but with a burning desire to advertise her lo-cality before the coming throngs of easterners. Redlands' Orange Growers' Associa-tion reports shipments of forty-eight less carloads than last year, yet an increase of $5000 in receipts. The very high average of $2.85 per 100 pounds "fancy" navels is the best commendation the growers of that region can have. These are some of the practical truths which support the reasonable claims of real estate men.

It is generally believed that a man cannot drive a nail without the aid of profane expletives, or a woman do the same work without mashing her thumb or bending the nail. Mrs. George Faul of Santa Ana has dispelled the be-lief in the latter part of the story, by driving ten nails into a redwood plank inside of one minute. It is a foregone conclusion that George Faul never tells his wife of the coffee and pies his mother used to make.

There is nothing mean about some people in Stockton. They found, by shance, a heavy flow of mineral water, and used it for sprinkling the grounds of a large institution there. After two weeks the shrubbery, flowers, plants and weeks the shrubbery, flowers, plants and foliage in general were found to be dying as a result of this water. It brought ruin and desolation upon all it souched. It is suddenly discovered that the water is strongly impregnated with lye, borax, Jimpson root, goose grease and general cussedness, and now they are going to bottle it, put it on the market and call it mineral water. There is method in this madbess.

Play on a Course Like Those of Scotland Where the Sport is Difficult, but not Wearlsome. Match and Medal Scores—Social Features.

W. H. Young captured the laurels in the match play of the invitation tournament on the Ocean Park golf links near South Santa Monica yesterday. Match play, which has increased rapidly in popularity in Southern Cali-fornia of late, was chief among the day's events, but the card was not lacking in medal play for ladies and gentlemen, after the fashion somewhat more common in America.

The Ocean Park course probably resembles as closely the golf courses on the other side of the Atlantic as any links in California, and much mor closely than most of them. The groun is covered with a species of sea grass is covered with a species of sea grass which is adapted to the purpose almost as well as real turf. That condition makes the driving very difficult, The balls cannot be made to roll by topping them, as on some courses, and it requires uncommon skill to loft. The railroad forms effective bunkers across two of the links. The yielding sod seemed to make the work less tiresome for the players than the hard ground usually encountered.

WOMAN'S NIGHTMARE She Shudders When She Realizes the Danger and Pain of Child-bearing.

Danger and Pain of Child-bearing.

There is so much suffering and danger in store for the young mother, that her happy anticipation soon gives way to a feeling of dread at the thought of the pain which she must undergo. This constant fear so preys upon the mind of many women that it fills them with terror and makes baby's coming a source of the greatest anxiety and dread.

All the suffering and danger of the ordeal can be avoided by the use of "Mother's Friend," which prepares the body for this important event. It relieves "morning sickness," and many other unpleasant conditions which exist during this time. Thousands of women praise "Mother's Friend" for bringing them safely through the most critical period of their lives.

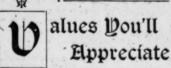

Every woman should send their name and address to the Bradfield Regulator Co., Atlanta, Georgia, and receive free, valuable information on the subject.

THE TIMES' "LINERS."

ONE OF THE PAPER'S MOST INTER. ESTING DEPARTMENTS.

The Chosen Medium for Bringing the Individual Buyer and Selle Together-Curious and Interest ing Things Developed by a Care ful Study-Circulation and Ad vertisements.

The newspaper that publishes the largest number of "want ads" or "liners" has the largest circulation; and the newspaper with the largest circulation gets the most "liners" to print. The terms are incontrovertible, and the paper which attains the distinction is the paper that gets closest to the people and gives them the most to the people and gives them the most for their money. The Times stands in this happy relation to the people of Los Angeles, and the fact that it is compelled to devote nearly a whole sheet of eight pages to the publication of "liners" [see the seven pages following this] emphasizes the value of th paper as an advertising medium as mere words could not possibly do. The intelligent and discriminating newspaper reader finds the advertising mere words could not possibly do.

The intelligent and discriminating newspaper freader finds the advertising columns of a successful daily newspaper equally as interesting as its various news departments it he often makes the study of the advertisements profitable to himself in the direction either of making money or saving money. If a person wants anything the newspaper tells him where he may get it to the best advantage. Suggestive advertising is often equally beneficial to both the buyer and the seller. Very often a person does not find out that he needs a certain article or piece of property until he sees it advertised upon favorable terms. Then it is a comparatively easy matter to bring buyer and seller together.

There are very many people who read the want columns of the newspapers for amusement and pleasure as well as for business and profit. There is many a story, many a laugh hidden in a page of "liners;" and, unfortunately, the cares, the troubles and the sorrows are also represented. In short, the "want ad" department of a newspaper is an epitome of human existence, the story of the every-day life of a community.

A glance through the 8-page "Liner" Sheet of last Sunday's Times reveals many things interesting and out of the ordinary. There are no less than fifty-five distinct and separate departments, and each one contains announcements of value to the average reader. Under the heading "Special Notices," for instance, it is set forth that "all dependent soldiers, their widows or minor children are now entitled to pensions." That should interest very many people. Another advertiser maintains that he was cured of rheumatism in six days, and he wishes to share, the benefits of his discovery for a consideration. For many years I was afflicted with serious Kidney and Liver disease, and during that time I suffered untold agonies. It seemed that I could find no relief, for doctors told me that I would never get well, and that all that could be done was to prolong my life a few years, perhaps. I was very deepondent, and resolved to take my case in my own hands. I tried several remedies without result. A friend told me of the wonderful Hudyan, and I sent for it at once. Within two weeks I found that I was gaining in etrength, and it was but a short time until Hudyan had removed every trace of my disease. Today I am a sound and well man in every respect, and I can truthfully say that I owe my present health and happiness to Hudyan. I am very grateful for the benefit I have received.

For Pure Blood is Essential to Health and Activity.

Sluggish Liver or Kidneys Produce Bad Blood,

When one's blood is out of order he is sich all over. There is a feeling of lassitude or languor. There is loss of appetite, coated tongue, a muddy or sallow complexion, and very often costiveness. Headaches are quite common, and often pimples or eruptions break out upon the skin.

These are symptoms that arise merely from impure blood, to say nothing of the more serious diseases that are directly due to bad blood, such as scrofula, eczema, erysipelas, malaria, rheumatism and a dozen or more other diseases. It is so easy to keep your blood in good order; it is easy to purify your blood if it is no bad condition. Hudyan will purify, earleit in bad condition.

IMPROVING STREET LINES. H. E. Huntington Outlines the Worl That is to Be Done.

H. E. Huntington and Christian de duigne, are here in Mr. Huntington's ar, "Otsego," looking after the work on several lines of street railroad. They took a trip over the new Brooklyn avenue line and others, and pronounced the lines in excellent shape. In reply to a question Mr. Huntington In reply to a question Mr. Huntington said that the improvement of the street-car system was far from being finished. It is the intention to go right on with further betterments until the whole system is brought up to date. As an evidence that much more work is to be done hes aid: "We have just bought rails for ten miles of street work in Los Angeles. This all goes to ferall lines already in existence, where heavier rails are desirable. We have no ties on hand just now, but a lot will be here soon, and early in July the work will go on again. It will be a long time before all the contemplated work is finished."

Mr. Huntington was asked if the Coast line will be finished in a year, he replied that there is a great deal of work to be done, that the work would be pushed with all reasonable dispatch. There is plenty of work to keep all the force which can be used to good advantage busy for a year, but he thought the year would be sufficient for the task.

As to the line coming in by the Santa that the improvement of the to good advantage busy for a year, but he thought the year would be sufficient for the task.

As to the line coming in by the Santa Susana Pass and Chatsworth Park, Mr. Huntington says there is no definite conclusion reached as to that work. The Grant Bros. have a contract to build about twelve miles on the Simi to get beets to the Oxnard factory. Beyond that no plans are made. This will not bring the road to the head of the Simi Valley, and from there to Chatsworth Park is about twenty-three miles. The tunnel, to get through the pass, will be quite as long as the San Fernando tunnel, or 7000 feet in round numbers.

There is not much to gain to tempt the road to do the heavy twenty miles of work. The distance around by Castac and Saugus is only three miles longer. The road up the Simi would be less, but the Saugus route, for a mountain line, is not bad.

Mr. Huntington also denies that the contract is let to anyone to take the kinks out of the old line between Santa Barbara and Ellwood. He thinks it quite probable that will be done at a later day but there is no decision as to when.

THE COCHANOS.

A Bit of Folk-lore About the Yuma Indians.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.] SAN DIEGO, June 23 .- Several days ago I read in The Times about a new light-draught steamboat for the naviga-tion of the Colorado River, being got-ten out at San Pedro and shipped by tion of the Colorado River, being gotten out at San Pedro and shipped by rail, "knocked down" to Yuma, where it is to be put together. The name of the boat was given as the "Cuchan," in the article referred to.

The next day I made a call on Capt. George A. Johnson, who is now hugging the lee shores of eighty pretty closely. The captain resides at "Old Town," and was the commander of the old "General Jessup," the first boat to ply the waters of the muddy Colorado in 1856, carrying supplies for the different army posts in Arizona. Capt. Johnson says the proper name of the boat is Cochano, which is the tribal name of the Yuma Indians.
"But how did they come to be called the Yumas?" I asked.
"Easily enough," replied the captain. "It was the result of custom. The Cochano Indians, when they saw signs of anyone approaching from the East, would send out two or three swift-footed runners as spies. If there were only a few men in the advancing party, they took little notice of it, but if there was a large body approaching, they lit-a fire of dry stuff and then piled on a lot of green boughs to make a dense column of smoke, to warn the Indians on the river of the approach of a large body of men. As 'Humo' is the Spanish word for smoke, the Mexicans gave them the name of 'Oomas,' which speedily became corrupted into Yumas, and hence the name of Fort Yuma. So you see that, as the American solders, in crossing the plains from Texas and New Mexico, invariably employed Mexican guides, they asked them what tribe of Indians they would next meet, after leaving the Pimas behind, and the guides invariably answered the 'Oomas,' or smoke Indians.' Capt. Johnson, in 1889, had a wagon contract for hauling freight inland from the river, and took an Indian of the Yuma tribe for his guide. His name was Pascual, and, when they met the Indians on the upper waters of the river, the latter invariably addressed the guide as "Cochano," not knowing his given name. And "Cochano," therefore, and not 'Cuchon," will be the correct name of the light-draft boat for the navigation of the Colorado.

Old a resident of the State as I am, and I landed here from a Panama steamer in January, 1853—I find Capt. Johnson always full of new information concerning the early history of this part of the State, which no man knows better than he. To sit down and talk with him, seems like opening en old book 'whose covers are worn with the lapse of time, but which has still a pleasant story to tell. Misfor.

knows better than he. To sit down and talk with him, seems like opening an old book whose covers are worn with the lapse of time, but which has still a pleasant story to tell. Misfortune has stripped Capt. Johnson of all his well-carned wealth, but it has not abated the geniality of his manner or the cordiality with which he welcomes an old friend. Capt. Johnson was the first Republican elected from Southern California to the Legislature in 1863, and he was again chosen in 1865, and he was again chosen in 1865 and he was gain chosen in 1865 as Senator. Anything you don't know about this country prior to 1860, just ask Capt. Johnson, and he will give it to you as straight as any book could tell it.

PRICES FOR WOOL. Cloverdale has held its annual wool sale, where large amounts are sold at aucton. The Santa Rosa Democrat says: "There were eight hundred bales of wool in were eight hundred bales of wool in he warehouse before the sale comhenced. Five hundred bales were sold esterday at prices which were condered satisfactory. The price fetched by the wool ranged from 15 to 16½ ents per pound. Three or four choice wis fetched as high as 17 cents. The neky holders of this wool included A. Marshall, Mrs. Rector and W. T. tock. This morning it is expected, he remaining bales of wool will be old."

It is to be borne in mind that these wools include the choicest fleeces grown in California.

BETTER TEAS. A prominent importer says of the tea trade under the new regulations:

As the old stocks of tea have practically gone into consumption, and no longer cumber the warchouses of the great cities, the new and better tea which consumers are now getting is sensibly increasing the consumption of the fragrant leaf in many districts where formerly only rubbish was sold under the guise of tea.

Consequently the new, clean, fragrant, nourishing and comforting teas which are now being used in all parts of the United States are real advertisements and helps to the tea trade, and cannot but result in larger sales, increased profits, and, therefore, greater satisfaction to the men in the business.

there would be a dearth before the season closes. We have canvassed the various producing sections and market centers, and find small supplies. These are very firmly held, and cannot be bought at prices that will justify cleaners working them into hand-picked goods, and selling them at today's quotations. The peach crop, which usually stagnates the peanut business one month of the year, will be no factor this season, and there are five full months yet in which to sell the remaining stock. We think one of the most favorable features, outside of the short supply, is that dealers who were supposed to have stock to carry them into next crop, are asking for quotations, and placing orders for considerable quantities, evidencing that a large portion of the output has gone into consumption.

"The demand for Spanish shelled nuts has been good the entire season. Trade in them is somewhat dull now, but this is expected during warm weather. We think the entire supply will be needed, and conditions appear favorable for better prices later on. Planting of this year's crop is now in progress. The acreage is expected to be about the same as a year ago. Advices from Tennessee are that the stock held there is small, and mostly in the hands of speculators, and cannot be bought except at very high figures."

TO BOOM CORN. A great corn exhibit is to be made in the Paris Exposition of 1890, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. It is proposed, indeed, to make this one of the most interesting of all the American displays at that make this one of the most interesting of all the American displays at that fair. The object, of course, is to popularize this great American product throughout the world. Thus far the outside world has been strangely shy of Indian corn. It has more nutriment than rye, and barley, which are much more widly used in Europe than corn. This propaganda has a great interest for Americans. Practically all of the product which is raised in the world is on this side of the Atlantic. It is the most valuable of all the crops grown in the United States. The endeavor to open new markets for Indian corn by the exhibits at the Faris Exposition next year will undoubtedly be successful. In fact, corn is conquering new markets already, although not to the extent which its merits as a food crop demand. In 1894 the corn exportation of the United States was $66,000,000. It was $22,000,000 in 1895, allo,000,000 in 1895. This gain is encouraging. It should be kept up. There is a chance that it can be largely increased if the propaganda which has been started for its general introduction throughout the Old World is prosecuted intelligently and persistently. tion will be watched with great interest in this country.

Col. J. H. Brigham, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, says: "Within the last two or three years I have noticed a marked change of feeling among farmers. There is less complaining and more interest in farm operations. Methods are improving, careful experiments are being made with fertilisers, improvement in the breed and care of farm animals is apparent, farmers are paying their delts, and if not able to pay in full can easily secure extension at lower rates of interest. They are also more careful about contracting debts; they are improving their buildings and home surroundings, and in many ways are manifesting a more hopeful feeling than prevailed a short time ago. I do not wish to discuss the causes that have brought about this change; I simply desire to show the facts and answer briefly some of the writers who make a business of trying to discourage farmers and checking any disposition on their part to take a more hopeful view of the future. After showing that the aggregate values of the great farm crops of corn, wheat, oats, rye, barley, hay and cotton increased fully $200,000,000, that the farm value per unit of measure also increased, and that the total value of farm animals increase in value of these products of the farm over that of 1895 reaches the enormous sum of nearly $500,000,000, not a very discouraging fact for the farmers. Every practical farmer will notice that the figures representing values of farm products are very conservative, considerably below the actual amount received by them when they market their crops."

cents per box, and Logan berries at 90 cents per crate.

Barley is weak, new feed quoted in San Francisco at 86½ to 90 cents, and some sold here at $1.05 on track.

Hay is coming in slowly, and choice barley sells at $11 from first bands and jobs at $12, alfalfa being $2 less each way. Yet no one seems to have confidence in the future. Speculators will not take hold freely even at $5 for elfalfa and $10 for barley. Neither will farmers venture to warehouse their hay at present. All hands are awaiting developments looked for in the next ten days, to settle the question of what price will be safe to go to warehouse with free purchases.

NEW YORK, June 24.—The bear operators were among the professional traders, but they became somewhat discouraged over the events of today's short session and engaged in something like a scramble to cover outstanding short contracts in the closing dealings. The bank statement, while it cannot be called a favorable one, was not as weak as had been foretold, and when the bears started to cover shorts after its publication they found that it had brought slight offerings to sell. Prices were marked up quite suddenly in some cases to the highest point of the day, making the closing quite buoyant in tone.

The further liberal expansion of more than $5,000,000 in loans, indicated the faith of banking authorities in the money outlook. Who are the borrowers of this large amount of money is as much a mystery as was the increase last week. It has certainly not gone into the stock market during the week. One supposition is that the gold that has been going abroad goes in the form of actual loans to foreign institutions. This would help to explain the mysterious action of the exchange market in face of the gold shipments, which has falled to reflect any yielding under offerings of bills against the shipments.

The strength in today's stock market centered in the Vanderbilt group, New York Central, Northwestern and St. Paul and Omnaha rising from 2½ to 4 points. The arrival in this country of Cornelius Venderbilt and the strong statement of New York Central for the fiscal year were the presumptive grounds for the strength of the group. The grangers, the trunk lines and the railroad list generally were strong throughout. There was weakness at one time in steel and wire, sugar and Tennessee coal. Steel and wire, sugar and Tennessee coal steel and wire did not raily strong, but other stocks were practically without exception higher at the close, and yielded at some points. The bears have been energetic and aggressive during the week and have moderate success in driving prices to a lower level. But their success has been in the steel stocks, in spile of the

Grain and Provisions. [ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

CHICAGO, June 24.—Wheat opened weak at 75% 276% for September, compared with yesterday's close of 76% 276%. Liverpool showed a closing decline of % 27%, considerably more than had been looked for. Northwest receipts were again heavy. Snow's report was decidedly bearish in tone, talking favorably of the crop prospects and materially raising the estimate of the total yield of the year, putting both the winter and spring yield at 275,000,000 bushels, a total of 550,000,000. The fact that initial prices were below "puts," however, acted as a steadying influence on the market for a time, as considerable buying was done to protect these privileges. The market touched 75% immediately after the opening, but recovered to 75%, and held at about that price until il o'clock when a decline ensued and carried the price to a point lower than has been touched for weeks. Even the most sanguine bulls threw over their holdings, or as much as they could, for the demand was small at the best. September finally declined to 74½, and closed weak at 74½ 274%. July closed at 73, and December at 76.

Corn was slow and heavy all day. The weakness of wheat was an influence. September closed ½c lower at 34½, July 34@34½, December 33%.

Oats sympathized with the other grains. September closed at 21½@21½, July 24½, May 23¾.

Provisions were a shade easier at the start, but a demand from shorts soon developed at the concession, and the prices recovered quickly. The excellent cash demand undoubtedly influenced buying, as did also the prospects of an amicable settlement of the labor troubles at the yards. At the close September pork was 5c higher, and lard and ribs 2½@5c higher.

ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE SECTION. ESTABLISHED DECEMBER 5, 1897

THE USES OF WAR,

HE conference now in session in The Hague is evidence that the great nations of the earth believe war to be an evil. As a general principle this belief is undoubtedly correct. Nevertheless, deplorable as is war in itself, it has been through war that the great triumphs of history have been brought about.

Fighting is the exaggerated manifestation of earnestness, of "the strenuous life;" and it is strenuous activity that is back of all progress. Hence it is that war has given impetus to the great movements of civilization. Homer and Virgil invoked the Muses to sing of the glory of the men who fought for principle, and in so doing voiced a sentiment which has prevailed ever since the beginning of human history, and which is fundamental among men of all races and all nationalities.

Rome became great through her military prowess; her downfall followed a loss of the martial spirit and an indulgence in dissipations attendant on more peaceful conditions. Christianity itself, with its doctrines of peace on earth and good will to men, has been propagated to a large extent by the stern instrumentality of war. In the early days of the church rigid rules were established prohibiting the use of weapons of war by Christians, and Christian soldiers returning from victorious campaigns were required to pass a term of penitence before they were admitted to the communion.

But after a time the church authorities came to recognize the fact that the interests of religion were allied with political and social conditions; that progress in religion as in other things required the forcible removal of obstructions to such progress. And so it came about that the attitude of the church was changed, and the sword was recognized as a rightful instrument with which to make way for the cross. Constantine, whose adoption of Christianity as the state religion of the Roman empire, earned for him the title of "the Great," caused the symbol of Christianity, it will be remembered, to be inscribed on the standards and shields of his army, and thus promulgated the doctrines, if not all the practices, of the religion of Christ.

Still more aggressive did Christianity become when Mohammedanism appeared and took possession of the places to which the Christian pilgrims went to worship, and insulted and persecuted the worshipers. "If it were a meritorious thing to make a pilgrimage to the Holy Sepulchre," history says, "much more would it be a pious act to rescue the sacred spot from the profof infidels." . And thus the religious campaigns known as the Crusades were inaugurated, and carried on for more than two hundred years.

It will scarcely need argument to convince anyone familiar with the causes and results of the American revolution that the American people could not have been what they are today had it not been for the resort to arms. No arbitration that would have been possible, or is con- nent than they ever were before, and they will ceivable today, would have recognized the absolute independence of this country, and it is this independence that is the very foundation of our liberty and our greatness. And the credit and glory of preserving the Union, which had to be achieved through war, are even greater than the honor of creating a new nation dedicated to liberty. Bismarck spoke the truth when he said, some years ago, that Germany secured her independence and her high rank among the nations by heroic conduct in wars resulting from conditions that made those wars necessary. Japan had been making progress in the arts of peace for some years, but it required the display of her military prowess to gain for her the respectful recognition of the world. But much more conspicuous in the good results it has accomplished is the recent war of the United States with Spain. The display of our military strength, coupled with the humane purpose for which the war was inaugurated, astonished the world, and this astonishment has been followed by a degree of admiration and respect that is an almost priceless asset in the nation's moral as well as its material resources.

While, therefore, it cannot be said that all wars result in a betterment of conditions, or in the promulgation of right principles, the fact remains that the disasters of war, terrible as they are, are not without great compensating benefits. The uplifting of the race of the earth without the shedding of blood would be a consummation devoutly to be wished; but where in history has that consummation ever been largely

THE COMING EDUCATIONAL CONVENTION.

T IS within the memory of most of the adult readers of The Times when the idea of such a national, representative gathering of the educational forces of the land as is expected to meet in this city next month would have been regarded as a most preposterous one. Los Angeles, less than a generation ago, was considered as upon the very frontier of American civilization, having little in common, educationally, with the college-nurtured East. But nowhere can the student of American progress find a better object lesson in this respect than that which Los Angeles itself presents in the rapid advance which she has made in the two past decades of her history. The old past of her life has as truly and as fully vanished as has the ancient past of Greece or Rome, and American enterprise and Yankee intelligence and thrift have made of her in this brief period of her history one of the handsomest and most progressive cities on the continent. Here two civilizations have touched hands-the civilization planted by the early padres, and that broader civilization which has been brought hither across the continent by the surging tide of immigration from the older sections of the land.

And one notable feature of this rapid influx of population is its character. It has brought to us the very best elements of the social and business life that the republic has to offer, so that we today are fully in sympathy with all that is highest and best in the spiritual, moral, and educational advancement of modern times. The college and the university; the church and the newspaper are as much in evidence here as in the older New England States, for Southern California is thoroughly cosmopolitan and is fully wide awake and jealous of every hindrance that would impede her progress.

What more fitting place, then, could have been hosen for this representative gathering of the educational forces of America? They will come to a city and a State that is in every way in sympathy with every element of modern progress. They will find Nature ready to welcome them in her happiest mood, and undreamed-of material for education which they never could find in the pages of a book. They will return better fitted to teach the geography of the American contirealize that this great, broad, breezy West is no ignoble part of this free land of ours. They will have a better conception of what expanded empire means when with their own eyes they see how from the thirteen original States we have grown till we cover the vast spaces of a continent. New England is pretty big, morally and intellectually, but the West is a big brother that will eventually outrun her, and our visitors will soon see that he has dropped his swaddling clothes, and in full-clothed manhood is ready for the race. But he is big-hearted and will give the warmest and most generous welcome to every visitor and show them his wealth of mountains and of plains, of rich soil and eternal sunshine, and point with pride to the schools and colleges; the universities and nurseries of art that have been established here, and welcome all who come as colaborers in the great school of national prog-Near it were Florida and Louisiana, needas a duty. Near it were Florida and Louisiana, needing a higher than Spanish civilization, and it acquired both.  THE HAGUE.

UNIQUE OLD CITY WHERE THE PEACE CONFERENCE MEETS.

By a Special Contributor.

HOULD the Peace Commissioners come forth from their tedious sitting with an acceptable plan for universal disarmament, The Hague will have added one more to the list of important diplomatic events which have occurred there. Those connected with the long struggle of the Dutch for freedom, and with the formation of the Triple Alliance were of great national interest; but a question of international interest gives no less distinction.

The Hague of today is a vastly different place from The Hague of the early part of the century. Until the reign of Louis Bonaparte, it was but a village, having neither corporation, nor walls, nor representation in the States General or Dutch Parliament. Within the past decade the tourist has claimed it, and the city is now quite cosmopolitan. In 1250 The Hague was the hunting-seat of the Counts of Holland, and the name is traced to the Counts' hedge (S'Graven Hage) surrounding the park.

After the bustle and stir of busy Amsterdam and Rotterdam, the capital city seems dignified and restful. Above all things, the visitor is impressed with the appearance of thrift, moderation and cleanlines. The houses are uniformly comfortable, generally two-story. They are built upon foundations of piles, driven close together into the sand, which would otherwise prove along the narrow, cobble-stoned streets, the water is often rushing through a sluice bigh above his head. The dikes are made of earth, said and clay, held together by willows or straw. Only the largest ones are of masonry.

Fighting water is the eternal problem of the Dutch. Not only must they guard against the inroads of the sea, but against the waters of the Rhine and many other rivers which find their outlet through Holland. Indeed, Napoleon annexed Holland, claiming it was the alluvion of French rivers. The natural tendency of the water to flow inward necessitates the thousands of picturesque windmills, which are the sine qua non of the country. By means of these and great steam engines, the water is kept moving through the intricate system of canals, and a fair amount of drainage is effected. At The Hague, although but a few miles from the coast, the water is more stagnant than at many other places.

The growth of The Hague is not due to its manufacwater is more stagnant than at many other places.

The growth of The Hague is not due to its manufacturing or commercial interests. It is the political center, and agriculture furnishes an income to the wealthier citizens. The farming lands lie just outside the town. They are secured for the purpose by the drainage of lakes or swamps, and are known as polders. After being drained, they are fertilized and cultivated, and these polders are so fertile that the cost of dikes, doms, windmills and pumps is soon repaid with interest. On arriving at The Hague, the sightseer who knows his business is likely to go from the station direct to the Vijverberg, or fish-pond hill. Such a gentle rise of ground would never be termed a hill by any one but a Hollander, to whom the sand dunes on the coast are veritable mountains. The Vijver is a large square pool near the center of the town, in the center of which is a tiny island, made into a park. On one side of the lake is a shady promenade, while on the opposite side is the Binnenhof, perhaps the most interesting building in Holland.

The Binnenhof is irregular and of brick, portions of it dating from the thirteenth century. Once a castle of which contains a fine national monument commemorating the restoration of Dutch independence in 1813.

Passing through the large gateway at the eastern side of the city, where sentries are constantly on duty, and traversing the garrison parade ground, which in the evenings at this season is full of bleyclists and cricket players, Het Bosch is reached. Het Bosch, or The Park, is a grand old forest of beeches and oaks, one of the few in all Holland that look as if Nature had had a hand in putting them there; and, best of all, the trees are not trimmed with the neatness and precision which make those along the streets and canals look as if they had oscaped from a Noah's ark. There are delightful walks and drives in Het Bosch, and in the center of it is the House in the Woods, the royal villatendered by the Queen as a meeting-place for the Peace Conference. The House in the Woods is a romantic old place, part of it having been built by the grandmother of William III of England. In this particular hall the mural decorations are painful to behold. They have been done by various artists of more or less distinction, long since dead, and it may be hoped they are not paying the just penalty of their atrocities.

As in every other town in Holland, The Hague has its collection of tame storks, pensioners of the city. The arms of Holland bear this bird, and it has a sort of sacred significance to the people. If one chose to make its home near a house, it is a good omen, and the stork will be furnished every convenience.

But, after all, it is not the museums, nor the palaces, nor Het Bosch that gives The Hague its charm for the visitor. Of course, he must sight-see; but it is the people he meets as he goes about and the customs he observes that make the lasting impression.

Every one is familiar with the quaint dress of the Dutch woman, the shelf-like extender worn about the hips, which makes the full skirt fall over like a cataract, and incidentally serves as a rest for the elbows; the curious head-dress of beautiful lace, a men.

At the fish market may be seen the fisher-folk of Scheveningen, with still more wonderful head-dresses. They bring their fish in dog-carts, and on returning the owner takes the place of the fish, and the homeward drive has been described as "taking an airing in a one-dog chaise."

The gratification of curiosity seems to have been reduced to a science. Just outside the windows of most of the houses mirrors are so arranged that one may see all that happens in the street without looking out. In the evenings the sidewalks will be filled with chairs and tables, and the entire family is gathered in front of the house, chatting with friends and sipping, sometimes beer or Rhenish wine, but more often only coffee. This, and strolling about the streets or parks where bands are playing, constitutes the pleasure of the majority; and nowhere else do people seem so happy.

All Holland dines as the clock strikes 5:30, The Hague included. There has been a breakfast of two or three kinds of broad and five or six kinds of cheese, with delicious coffee. At noon more bread and cheese, and to the initiated possibly a plaet of soup. By 5:30 o'clock every one in the country is so hungry that he rushes to the table. Should the stranger, not knowing, return to his hotel an hour later, he will find everything put to rights, and the bland landlord surprised that he expects anything to eat. Of course, a plea of ignorance and a persuasive coin may produce a bite, but the next evening the stranger joins the rush at the appointed time.

The population of The Hague is something over one hundred and eighty thousand; and it would be hard to find another city of this size where having a mild sort of good time seemed to be the business of so many people, with the appearance of its being a very profitable pursuit as well.

RAILWAY LUXURY IN EUROPE.

People who have not been abroad, and lic as to certain features of railway lighting and travel in Europe. People who have not been abroad, and who imagine that the comforts of the Pullman and Wagner are obtainable only in the United States, will perhaps be surprised to learn that the "wagonslits," or sleeping cars of Europe carried last year not fewer than 2,250,000 passengers; and the service applies only to the continent, excluding England, Scandinavia and Greece. Its northern terminus is St. Petersburg, its western the French shore of the English Channel; its eastern is Nijni Novgorod, on the Aslan borderland, and its southern is Palermo, Sleily, and Seville, Spain. At one time the company owned a lot of hotels, but these, which have now been transferred to an allied management, number no fewer than fifteen, while a new one, now building in Paris, to be known as the Palais Elysée, is to beat anything in London or New York. The sleeping cars have a corridor on one side, are sixty-two feet long over all and weigh, complete, 58,000 pounds, the frame being entirely of steel. As to train lighting in Europe, some recent statistics show that a well-known gas system used also in this country on some 13,405 cars, is used in Europe on over seventy-five thousand cars and thirty-six hundred locomotives. Iwo English roads which have been experimenting, with electricity for twenty years have over four thousand cars lighted by this gas and run fourteen gas works to supply them.

EDISON'S PORTLAND-CEMENT INDUSTRY

The name of Edison has just been associated with a Portland-cement industry, with a capital of $11,000,000, and many people are wondering what it means. The fact is that Mr. Edison's work in crushing magnetic iron ore to extract the iron from the rock through which it is sparsely scattered, has taught him many ideas and tricks in rolling and crushing such substances ideas and tricks in rolling and crushing such substances as go to make up cement, and his machinery used in separating the low-grade magnetic ore has already been applied successfully in other industries—in zinc mines, for instance. His briquetting machines for compressing the ore are also favored for utilizing coal culm and dust. Moreover, as a big by-product, Mr. Edison has at his iron mines huge mountains of culm and dust. Moreover, as a big by-product, Mr. Edison has at his iron mines huge mountains of crushed rock. It is said that this will help make the finest cement in the world. It is already in large use as a basis for building mortar. Being crushed and not having been rolled around, like sea sand, for centuries, it has a fine crystalline edge that builders appreciate. Moreover, a portion of this sand separates itself out in various ways and becomes useful in the prepatation of paints. Hence, Mr. Edison's interest in the Portland cement industry is not such a mystery after all. ment industry is not such a mystery, after all.

rather unstable. Land is too scarce for the luxury of lawns, gardens or "backyards." Hence it is a common sight to see the beating of carpets, and other housework done in the streets. Then, too, the outside of the house must be as clean as the inside; and if the passerby gets an unexpected shower-bath he will discover a Dutch maid high on a ladder scrubbing down the weather boarding. Such extreme cleanliness is a trifle uncomfortable to the average visitor. He feels that he should leave his shoes at the door with 'he peasants' sabots; and a dusty traveler is positive that the house will get a thorough overhauling as soon as he has taken leave. But, strangely enough, the Dutch are not very clean personally; in fact, they are quite the opposite, which is a glaring inconsistency.

Wherever there is a bit of ground, it is made into a garden, with a sort of reed grass and most beautiful bulbous plants. Then there are the hedges of box, trimmed in fantastic shapes, representing a man, a woman, or some fancy of the owner. The few trees to be seen are marshaled along in straight lines, so prim and obviously planted that nature could rever be accused of having put them there.

The Holland house painter may at least claim individuality. What starts out to be a green house may get a dash of yellow or blue or red that makes it look as if the green paint had given out; but it is only a matter of taste.

At the northeast end of the Binnenhof is the famous museum of pictures, composed almost entirely of the works of Dutch masters. Here the art lover may spend days, and go away unsatisfied. At some distance to the northwest of the Binnenhof is the royal palace, the home of the Queen. It is a very plain and rather unimposing structure. Opposite the court which separates the two portions of the palace is an equestrian statue of William I, Prince of Orange. Of even more interest than the palace are the magnificent stables, separated from the house by a beautiful grove. The stables are filled with fine horses, although the royal equipages are very modest. In the vicinity of the palace is a very desirable residence portion of the city, though the houses differ but little from those seen elsewhere. A short drive leads to Willems Park.

J. J. HILL, THE RAYLROAD MAGNATE, DISCUSSES THE SUBJECT.

By a Special Contributor.

AMES J. HILL, president of the Great Northern system of railroads, which crosses the territory between St. Paul and the Pacific and covers part of it with a veritable network of tracks, is short and broad in person; in New England they would call him "stubbed," making two syllables of the word.

In complexion he is dark, almost to swarthiness, and his face is full of rugged lines inscribed by the strenuous hand of experience. His eyes are dark brown, possibly black; sometimes they glow like two coals. His jaws and lips are covered with a rough growth of whiskers. His hair, slightly gray and thinned at the top, is almost long enough to brush his coat collar. His dress is unobtrusive, a rough business suit, the coat of which is a short sack, being his favorite. His hair is soft and har a broad brim. He smokes with enthusiasm when he talks, and he talks well on any topic you are likely to broach, avoiding himself if possible, but always ready to discourse about his railroads and the Northwest. He believes in hard work, mixed with thought, good company in business and luck. These three, things have helped him, who began life a poor boy on a sterile Canadian farm, to become one of the four or five greater developers and railway monarchs of the age.

Sitting in his St. Paul office the other day, Mr. Hill discussed with the writer the future of the country, present chances for young men, and other topics of current interest. Incidentally his talk threw much light upon his own life and personality. Hill is an optimist, as you would expect a man of his type and achievements to be, though he isn't blind to the fact that many new and difficult problems have been brought into existence by modern business and social developments. In spite of these, however, he says there are still innumerable opportunities for young men to win financial success in the United States. The development of the country has only begun, so to speak, and there'll be plenty of chances as long as development is going on. But the man who desires to get his chance must work and persevere in his work.

Steady Workers in Demand.

"The crying need of the Northwest today." said Mr. In complexion he is dark, almost to swarthiness, and his face is full of rugged lines inscribed by the strenu-Stendy Workers in Demand.

Steady Workers in Demand.

"The crying need of the Northwest today," said Mr. Hill, "is men who have the gift of continuance. We have sent 15,000 ctrack laborers out in the past twelve months, and yet we have not had more than 2500 at work at any one time. The majority of the laborers now at work in the Dakotas and Minnesota are Italians and Poles. The Italians are highly unsatisfactory. As a rule their object in coming here is solely to get enough money together to support them in idleness at home, and they hoard their-earnings to the last possible degree. For this reason, and because they come from a land where food is not abundant, they rarely eat enough or well enough, and so have not sufficient physical strength to stand the strain of long-continued labor. The Poles are much more satisfactory. They are strong, hardy and willing; moreover, they are anxious to leave off working for wages as soon as pos-year through. We have been at our wits' end to remedy this tremendous drawback to the development of the country. They will work along steadily for a week, perhaps, accomplishing more and better work than can be done by the same number of men in the same time anywhere else in the world. Then comes Sunday, the day they should rest, clean up and accumulate strength for the next week's work, but they don't clean up, and instead of resting they make love to the flask. The result is disastrous, both to themselves and to us, for nothing will break men down more quickly than dirt and drunkenness combined. We have tried the plan of keeping our white laborers busy throughout the entire week, seven days at a stretch, without giving them any time to get drunk, hoping in that way to preserve their health, but they can't stand the strain. Many of them become tramps, dirty, disreputable and lazy, living from hand to mouth, moving about from place to place, stealing railroad rides whenever they get an opportunity, and frequently losing their lives under the wheels or between the cars. There isn't a week in a year that some of them are not killed on our lines, through no one's fault but their own. With the Japs it is different. When Sunday comes they make things clean and take their rest like sensible fellows. Perhaps they can't do as much work, man for man, as the whites, and so a larger force may be required, but they are always cheerful, always healthy, always ready to work. They never become tramps.

Is There Work for All?

Is There Work for All?

"There is much talk that men cannot get work to do in this country. It is not so. Every healthy man who is idle in the United States today is so from choice. I do not say that every carpenter can get carpenter work to do, or that every plumber can find a job at his trade, but if he will take what he can get, every idle man in the country can go to work as soon as he is ready to. At this moment there are jobs ranging in pay from $1.25 to $3 and $4 a day for 100,000 men in Northwest. There are, no doubt, enough idle men in this region to fill all these jobs, but they are men who have dropped out of healthy, active life into the life of the loafer in the manner I have described. In a sense this condition of things is enough to make an observant man pessimistic, but a broad view throws a different light upon it. To offset the arm of idle, vicious men—for idleness breeds viciousness—there is a great body of busy, prosperous farmers, business men, professional men and employés in Minnesota, in the Dakotas, in Montana and away out to the Coast. "It may be true that the wilfully idle are now multiplying; if true, this might be taken for a disquieting sign by the faint-hearted. But there is a remedy, and it is self-acting; the doctrine of the survival of the fittest is eternally true, and those who will not work cannot eat.

Words to Young Men.

"Were I asked to give definite advice to a young man of intelligence and health, but without capital or the training of the schools, I should say, first of all, that he must remember that opportunity has much to do with success in any place, and in any circumstances, in other words, there is something in luck. At the same time luck and laziness don't go together, and opportunities will not hunt him up. He must look for them and work for them, and, after all, the measure of success depends a good deal upon the man. Such a young man as you suggest could not win if he were bent on living as if he had an income of thousands, while yet his income were not more than from $400 to $600 a year. But let him work steadily, live prudently, and give signs

RESIDENCE OF J. J. HILL AT ST. PAUL, MINN.

Conditions of political and personal freedom in Poland are not to their liking, and consequently they do not desire to return to the Old World as the Italians do, but are prone to settle down on land in this country as soon as they get money enough to this country as soon as they go do so.

"West of the Dakotas we use more Japs than men of any other nationality. We did not begin the employment of the little brown men from the Orient from choice, but because we were obliged to; we couldn't depend on men of any other nationality. It is only right to say that having tried the Japs we find them the most satisfactory laborers we have. They are willing, cheer-satisfactory laborers we have. ful and strong; they work a little cheaper, and that is a point, of course, but the great advantage of the labor of the Japs over any other labor now available in the Northwest is their reliability. It comes mainly from their personal cleanliness Disease Bred by Dirt and Drunkenness.

"Most white laborers, and especially Italians, simply will not keep themselves and the places they live in clean. The result is disease. We have great trouble to keep typhoid fever out of the camps, exactly as it was hard to keep it out of the volunteer army camps last year. Disease and intemperance incapacitate a large proportion of white laborers much of the time, and few of them are busy more than four days in the week the of intelligence and enterprise, and help will eventually of intelligence and enterprise, and help will eventually come to him. In truth, help for such young men is constantly looking for them to take it; help to buy farms, help to take charge of enterprises, small at first, but in this period of rapid evolution, sure to grow into some thing well worth while; help of greatly diversified sorts. No one who reflects a bit can fail to see the faisity of the notion that the day of rapid development of big enterprises has passed. It is true, for instance, that more miles of long-distance steam railroads have been built than are yet to be constructed, but the development of urban and interurban electric railroads is still comparatively in its infancy. The same is true of many other forms of development. They all require capital; but when of the right sort a young man need have no other forms of development. They all require capital; but when of the right sort a young man need have no difficulty in attaching himself advantageously to those who can command. One of our most serious troubles, at the present time, is the scarcity of proper men to place in posts of trust and responsibility, as foremen, superintendents, and the like. We simply can't find them fast enough. There are plenty among the working men, probably, with sufficient ability to assume such posts, but most of them insist upon joining in certain short-sighted movements that shut them out of promotion and often deprive them of the work they already have to do. I will give you an example of this:

A Railroad Economy.

"Until a comparatively recent date we employed hun-

"Until a comparatively recent date we employed hundreds of coal-heavers to replenish the tenders of our engines. They had to work in the dark as well as in the light, for people wish to travel by night as well as by day in these busy times, and freight bound from the West to the East cannot be stopped when the sun goes down. So, although our coal-heavers were unempleyed a good portion of each day while waiting for engines, and did not work more than from four to six hours in each twenty-four, they were obliged to be 'on watch' all the time. Our system was to divide the day into twelve-hour shifts, thus keeping two full forces of men at each point where our engines took coal. We paid the men $45 a month. After a while some one came along and persuaded them that they were not having a fair show; that no matter how short the actual time of work each day, no man ought to be on watch more than eight hours at a time. Accordingly, they demanded three shifts a day with no reduction of pay. This meant adding one-half to the cost of coaling our engines. Down to that time it had cost us 12½ cents a ton to replenish our locomotive tenders; under the new arrangement it would cost us nearly 19 cents.

"Well, we had to keep the trains running, and we accepted the terms of the men; but they were not pleased, for this was an increase of running expenses which brought no increase of business. If we were to increase argainst the volume of business we would have either to stop our trains or increase our freight and passenger rates enormously. Naturally, we sought a remedy for the new situation. It was by no means difficult to find. We have many men of mechanical expertness among our employés, and in a short time we were coaling our engines by machinery, employing only two men at each coaling place, one by day and one by night, at a cost of $90 a month, instead of eight or ten men at a cost of from $360 to $400 a month. Now each man simply tends a machine, run at a nominal expense. Now when an engine has to be coaled it runs alcngside a trestle, the fireman pulls a lever, and the coal is chuted into the tender. There is not only a great saving of expense, but also of time, and this latter is one of the most desirable features of the present system. Per ton, the cost of coaling our engines now averages between 3 and 4 cents; sometimes it is as low as 2 cents. That is all right for us, but not very pleasant for the men, since nearly four hundred of them who had steady work, hard, perhaps, while it lasted, but with plenty of rests between whiles, have had to seek other employment; but it should be remembered that it is their own fault if they are idle. Eventually we might have come to the present method of coaling in any event, but we hadn't contemplated it when the demand for eight-hour shifts was made."

Mr. Hill's Methods.

Personally, James J. Hill practices the gospel of work as persistently as he preaches it. His friends say he is never idle except when asleep. My call upon him was made late on Saturday afternoon. Nearly every part of the big Great Northern building was deserted except the president's offices. It was occupied by the president and the clerks who work under his personal direction. All were as busy as bees. In spite of their generally longer hours and their infrequent half holidays as compared with the other clerks, all Great Northern employés court places close to the president. When he takes a young map into his office it mears that he has some faith in that young man and if the faith is justified by his works, promotion is as sure as the sunrise after the night.

Some years ago a rather diffident, serious-faced young St. Paul lad, named Frank E. Ward, went ot work for Hill as his personal stenographer. Times had never been easy with the boy, and this led him to approach his duties with terrible earnestness. From the first Hill was interested. He noticed in particular that the boy always had a book handy, which he pored over whenever there was a minute's respite. One day the president picked up the book. It was not a work of fiction, but an algebra, and no objection was made to its continued study. It is Hill's custom whenever traveling over his road to sit at the rear of the train and make a flying inspection of the tracks and the right-of-way. Till Frank E. Ward's time Hill had always insisted that whoever was with him on a trip of inspection should also watch the tracks, but he made an exception in the case of the young stenographer. He was allowed and encouraged to study when making trips All the same, the boy kept a pretty close watch on everything pertaining to the road and its operation, as Hill found out from time to time by talks with him. One day the stenographer was promoted to be president's assistant. Later, when Hill saw that the lad, now grown to be a man, was competent to work alone, he was promoted again, and he now writes "general superintendent" after his signature. The story that Great Northern clerks have taken up the tudy of algebra extensively since Ward's promotion sprobably not true but it is certain that his rise has een an excellent obejct lesson all along the line.

Luck as Well as Management.

Luck as Well as Management.

Though circumstances have sometimes been against Hill, it is true that luck has generally been with him. Thus, while the St. Paul and Pacific, the first link of the Great Northern chain, did little business the year before he acquired its control, its business iacreased several fold the year afterward. This increase was a piece of luck and not of management, due to the first big Manitoba boom. The business it engendered had to go over Hill's road, for there was no other thoroughfare for it. Six months before Hill got the road one or two trains a day were counted good business; six months afterward the line was choked with trains from terminus to terminus, and big gangs of men were kept busy building sidings over which the trains might pass one another.

From the beginning of his active life, Hill has constantly sought for shorter ways of doing things, for schemes to save labor, and so make transportation rates cheaper. His first warehouse, built on the St. Paul levee more than thirty years ago, long before he owned an inch of rail, is a case in point. All previously-built warehouses in St. Paul stood so far back from the river that goods unloaded from the steamers had to-be deposited on the wharves in the open air till the; could be carried into the warehouse, thus being annulled twice. Hill's warehouse was built at the water's edge, so that goods could be unloaded into it directly from the steamers. Men laughed at the warehouse while it was being built, exactly as they did at-Hill's aunouncement later that he was going into the railroad business. Eventually they stopped laughing and took to imitating him. Confidence in the country, push, perseverance and the sort of common sense shown in the location of this warehouse have been great factors in the building up of the Great Northern Railroad system.

Mr. Hill told the writer the other day that he found out long ago that transportation is nothing more nor less than overcoming the law of gravitation. Were it not so a carrier-pigeon co line.

Mr. Hill's beautiful residence, his gallery of paintings, his 4000-acré farm, where he carries on all sorts of agricultural operations suitable to the Northwest, and where a noteworthy herd of buffalo is kept, have often been described. He has given careful thought to all these things as well as to the construction and operation of his roads and the development of the Northwest, but to nothing has he devoted more care than the education and training of his sons. One of them, W. L. (known familiarly to every one in St. Paul as Louis) is now assistant to his father. The other, James N., is vice-president of the Eastern Railroad of Minnesota. Samuel Hill, a son-in-law, is president of one of the Great Northern branches.

I. D. MARSHALL.

HAWAII'S NATIONAL DISH.

[Caspar Whitney in Harper's Weekly:] Poi is the national dish of Hawaii, and has the great advantage of being cheap and fattening—formerly the native took as much pride in his particular brew of poi as some good housewives do in their biscuits, but now, alas! his pride has departed, and this industry too has fallen into the hands of ever-watchful John Chinaman.

And the making of poi is no easy task-perhaps that And the making of pol is no easy task—perhaps that explains the natives' retirement from the work. Taro is a tough fleshy root, and in the first pol-making stage it must be ground to a flour. This could, of course, be done by machinery, but that would not be Hawaiian—therefore, as in the old days, the tough root is brought to the desired condition by a stone pestle and a wooden—sometimes stone—trough. After its reduction to flour it is then worked into a thinnish paste, and if the best article of pol is desired, it is permitted duction to flour it is then worked into a thinnish paste, and if the best article of poi is desired, it is permitted to ferment before being served in the calabash, as the wooden bowl—the only dish of the natives—is called. Usually one calabash answers for a family, which, squatting around the common dish, feeds by skillfully gathering a quantity of poi on the fingers, and then with equal dexterity transferring the mess to the mouth. According to its consistency, it may be "one finger" two finger or "three finger" poi, the index-finger being equal to the task of the feeding if the poi is quite thick, and three fingers required when it is at its thinnest. It is an acquired taste to the foreigners, but many of them appear to acquire it readily enough—the white Hawaiians take their poi and squid (as the dried tentacles of the octopus are called) with apparently as much relish as the natives. It was tasteless to my palate, unless perhaps it suggested starch.

POPULATION IN 1900

[St. Louis Globe-Democrat:] There is a disposition among conservative statisticians to avoid high figures in th forecasts of the pobable population which will be found in the country a year hence. There are, of course, two causes for this. The financial convulsion of 1893, the effects of which lasted until about 1899, the cycle immigration and probably cont down the next. of 1893, the effects of which lasted until about 1899, checked immigration, and probably cut down the natural increase from the inside. As nations grow older the rate of increase in population diminishes. Keeping these two considerations in mind, however, there is no good reason to suppose that the aggregate inhabitants in 1900 will be below the 75,000,000 mark. This figure, indeed, will represent a very encouraging growth. No other country in the world shows a rate of population expansion anywhere near as great as this. When Benjamin Franklin long ago excited the incredulity of Europe by predicting that the great republic of the West, which was soon to come into being, would double in population every quarter of a century, his estimate was very far from being as wild as the Old World supposed.

AN AMERICAN IDEA.

MARVELOUS GROWTH OF THE NEWS-PAPER CLIPPING BUREAU.

By a Special Contributor.

IGHTEEN years ago a man had an idea, which he developed with 50 cents, the last money in his pocket. Less than a month ago half a dozen firms, engaged in the business resulting from that idea, coalesced and capitalized their joint undertak-ing at $5,000,000. Even at that they had no stock for sale—the capitalization was merely an equitable prorating. Unless all signs fail there will be hand-some dividends. The business is international, and so solidly established that only a social cataclysm can overset it.

The story has been told more than once of how a young Russian-American, at the end of his resources, saw a famous French artist pay handsomely for papers saw a famous French artist pay handsomely for papers several days old containing notices of his salon pictures, and was inspired by the sight with the thought of making a business of furnishing such notices to whoever had need of them. But the spread and development of the thing thus insignificantly begun will be ment of the thing thus insignificantly begun will be news to the most part of the reading world.

Today 50,000 persons and $50,000,000 are employed in the business of making and distributing newspaper clippings. There are between fifty and one hundred bureaus in the United States, nearly as many in England and on the continent, others at Melbourne, Sydney, Calcutta, Yokohama, Hongkong, Johannesberg, Natal, Buenos Ayres and Rio de Janeiro. All the biggest of these are in effect international. If they have not branches all about, they have instead a sort of traffic arrangement, after the manner of the big banks, by which their foreign correspondents fill cabled orders quite as though they were received over their own counters.

Even this does not mark the full spread of the idea Even this does not mark the full spread of the idea. Railways, telegraph lines and express companies have gone into the business on their own account. At first they were among the regular bureaus' most paying subscribers, but presently they began ordering local agents to clip and file every line of railway matter appearing in local sheets, and to send the clippings to the main office, where they are indexed and put away. Several times an item so kept has proved to be worth a good many dollars to the company keeping it.

Specialized Clippings.

a good many dollars to the company keeping it.

Specialized Clippings.

Among clippers as elsewhere specialization works. Some bureaus give their whole mind to things literary. To them the author, especially the fledgeling author, is as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. The minute a book is out—sometimes, even earlier—the writer of it receives their circular letter, inclosing a sample clipping—a notice of himself or his book, and asking his subscription. The rate is $5 a hundred clippings, or if the writer be little known, $5 a year. Where competition is keen, figures are often lowered one-half. In case the author should already have engaged with another bureau it is not uncommon to ask that the later comer be allowed to send clippings also, receiving pay only for such as are not duplicates of those already received.

Besides notices and reviews, the literary bureau will, if ordered, send all manner of literary intelligence. It is thus a very present help to those who live away from the great centers. It is a question, however, if the bureau is not equally a boon to those in the great centers. Life there is so tense and crowded, one has but little time to seek out items for himself.

Certain facts in clipping history bear out the idea. Emperor William, for example, is much too busy to read the papers, yet needs strenuously to know what his world is saying of particular things. So he has a scrap book, in charge of a court officer, whose business it is to see that every morning it is brought strictly up to date, and duly submitted to the imperial eye. W. T. Stead, another very busy man, is credited with possessing a whole library of books made up of clippings. It fills three dingy rooms in a London house, and is said to have suggested to him the plan of the Review of Reviews.

Other bureaus concern themselves mainly with business affairs. They give to their subscribers not only to have suggested to him the plan of the Review of Reviews.

Other bureaus concern themselves mainly with business affairs. They give to their subscribers not only all that appears in print concerning the subscribers' lines of business, but advance intelligence of such things as the letting of contracts, the adoption of building plans, new materials, inventions, discoveries, legal decisions affecting commercial interests, also legislation. While the Dingley Bill was pending every firm interested in the wool trade received from a Chicago bureau every scrap of intelligence bearing on the wool schedules. It is the same with other staples—cotton, copper, wheat, live-stock, crop prospects generally. The whole material world, indeed, is the business bureau's parish, and one that is very carefully looked after.

The very latest development is the bureau of medical intelligence which collects and distributes whatever is new in medicine. This is not merely of the astounding discoveries that exploit themselves, but of operations, experiments, theories even, which men eminent in the profession put into print. They are, of course, always available to the men who know where to find them and have time to look.

Patrons Royal and Otherwise.

Patrons Royal and Otherwise.

One needs imagination to see anything picturesque in the mechanics of clipping. One establishment with over a hundred employés shows to the casual eye only ranks and rows of men and women, reading, blue-penciling, clipping, pasting and stamping. This bureau's usual output is 50,000 clippings a week. Under a rush order it could clip and mail 100,000. There is an elaborate system of card classification. The cards are hung on books in a start-story, rack some four fest excess. on hooks in a stair-step-y rack some four feet across, and running the whole length of a very long room. Nearly every hook is filled, but the fact is far from being solely a comment on human vanity. It needs but a little reflection to see that the clippings run the whole a little reflection to see that the clippings run the whole gamut of human passions, necessities and desires. With that in mind a certain sense of tragi-comedy, or comic tragedy, comes as one looks. The commonlace manila envelopes fly out and about, freighted with many things. Ninety-nine may signify nothing, yet the hundredth be potential of joy or grief, of failure or success. Oddly, it is not the class one would look foractors, artists and authors—which is most avid of this sort of thing. Society people are even more anxious to see what the world outside thinks of them. This not only of the great lights, but those who affect to deplore publicity. The book of "latest orders" in a big. New York establishment around horse-show and dogshow times, and in the era of important social functions, would reveal much as to the inwardness and inspiration of certain published things.

The professionals, however, by no means slight the bureau's good offices. They could not afford to—neither could the bureaus afford to let them. Witness these two facts: Duse, in the course of eleven weeks, received 2888 personal clippings; Richard Mansfield's order excludes the works of his press agent, and critiques of his plays as plays, yet in the season his weekly clippings bill often runs to $30.

agent, and critiques of his plays as plays, yet in the season his weekly clippings bill often runs to $30.

Queen Victoria n Patron.

Queen Victoria subscribes to more than one bureau, but never sees the clippings until they have been put in books under the editing of some of her family, which means, of course, the leaving out of anything unpleasant. The Prince of Wales also takes clippings from two sources. In addition he cuts out with his own royal hands all the pictures of himself which appear in the public prints. The greater the caricature, the broader his chuckle over it. Slurs upon his family are said to touch him nearly, yet to things said against himself he is artlessly indifferent. One can readily credit that upon hearing that by his own order a scrap book was made for him containing American opinions in re the baccarat scandal.

However, the royal patron dearest to clippings-bureau regard is His Majesty the Czar of All the Russias. He has shown himself exceedingly well disposed toward them. Some of their notable orders have come at his instance. A New York bureau man has made for him sumptuously-bound scrapbooks, all Russia leather, and gold clasps and gilt edges, first about the death and obsequies of his father, Alexander III, then about his own marriage and coronation ceremonies, and later in regard to the American journey of Prince Hillkoff, his Minister of Railways. The same house has now in hand clippings about the Peace Conference, which are to form another in the series of imperial scrapbooks. They are the finest ever made in New York, exceeding even the magnificent volumes in which Mrs. Bradley-Martin is preserving the eight-thousand-odd clippings in praise of her famous ball.

Governmental Clippings*.

Uncle Sam himself has stolen the clippings idea, and keeps at the White House a corps of trained clippers and a government scrapbook. President Cleveland is said to have looked at the scrapbook just once in his last term—that was in the course of the Venezuela crisis. Mrs. Harrison subscribed to a bureau on her own account, and her daughter has many books full of the things printed about "Baby" McKee. Mrs. Cleveland had a scrapbook of personal notices—not, however, of herself, but of her husband. The wives of many other prominent men have similar books, which it is both reasonable and charitable to hope do not include the caricatures of their liege lords. Almost every man in public life is a bureau-subscriber. "Himself" is the order oftenest written opposite a big name, though in many cases it is "Himself and Pacific railroads," or "Himself and the Nicaragua Canal," or even "Himself and the Agricultural Department."

Uncle Sam is, however, not wholly without conscience in the matter of clippings or perhaps he has learned wisdom by experience. It took $15,000 to buy for his archives a complete file of a New York paper covering the period of the civil war; further, the Townsend scrap-book history of that war cost Columbia College $40,000. Whether from conscience or thrift, the government has just ordered and received from a New York establishment a scrap history of the war with Spain. It is in twenty big volumes, though most of the war pictures were left out. The volumes are bound in Morocco cloth, and cost the government $1000. That sum, indeed, hardly covered the cost of making, but the bureau man has gathered a duplicate set of clippings, and looks for his profit in them whenever a rich and patriotic citizen decides to give a similar history to West Point or Annapolis. Stanford University has already a monumental set of scrap histories bearing on everything American, and particularly the life and works of its founder.

ready a monumental set of scrap histories bearing on everything American, and particularly the life and works of its founder.

John L. Sullivan gets clippings—subject not specified. Lord Randolph Churchill ordered "everything unfavorable," and was forced by the size of his first month's bill to exactly reverse his order. Nicola Tesla wants "electrical inventions." Edison is more comprehensive—hie orders clippings upon above twenty subjects of living interest. W. D. Howells subscribes intermittently for real incidents going with whatever story he may have in hand. Many lesser lights of literature order "unusual real stories." One man who is said to have a plot factory patronized by both novelists and dramatists when imagination lags, wants all sorts of hairbreadth happenings. "Stories of elopement" was another order. The maker of it, strange to relate, was not a realistic novelist, but a luckless lover, who hoped thus by vicarious example to persuade his sweetheart to defy her parents and make him happy. The Cramps get every line printed in any part of the world about any one of their ships. Dr. Seward Webb has everything about horses, and C. Oliver Iselin all about cup races. Mr. Iselin has already a very fine scrapbook of the Defender's exploits.

HOW CLOVES ARE GATHERED.

[New York Press:] More cloves are said to be used in America than in any other country, England and France following in the order named. In this country and in Great Britain they are used almost wholly as a condiment, but in France they are used largely in the manufacture of certain liqueurs. To some degree they are employed in medicine for their tonic properties. The name clove is from the French clou, meaning a nail. The tree is an evergreen, growing from forty to fifty feet high, with large, oblong leaves and crimson to fifty feet high, with large, oblong leaves and crimson flowers at the end of small branches in culsters of from ten to twenty. The tree belongs to the same family as the guava, the pomegranate and the ross apple. The cloves are at first white, then light green, and at the time of gathering bright red. Pieces of white cloth are spread under the trees at the harvesting time, and the branches are beaten gently with bamboo sticks until the cloves drop. They are dried in the sun, being tossed about daily until they attain the rich, dark color which proclaims them ready for shipment. A clove tree begins to bear at the age of about 10 years. clove tree begins to bear at the age of about 10 years, and continues until it reaches the age of 75 years. There are two crops a year, one in June and the other in December. Hot weather is favorable to the crop, although a little fog is said to improve the flavor.

IN BUFFALO TIMES AN EXCITING EARLY-DAY ADVENTURE

RELATED BY AN ARIZONAN. By a Special Contributor.

HOSE who made their homes on the frontiers of Kansas in the early '70's "lived more stories than artist could ever invent," as Kipling would put it. Those were the days when "unreconstructed" Indians held sway over all the land and countless myriads of buffalo roamed at will over the vast plains. Between seasons of drought, Indian raids and buffalo invasions, the settlers upon the remote line of advancing civilization held their lives in their hands.

It was in the fall of 1870 that, taking the advice of Horace Greeley, I left Philadelphia and hung out my shingle in a town upon the very verge of the unbroken plains of Western Kansas. It was a live, bustling busy litle city, with the customary mixed population of a frontier town, enterprising, aggressive Americans, lazy, shiftless Indians, cowboys, gamblers and desperadoes. But, withal, a very desirable point, both present and prospective. So here I cast in my lot for good or ill, come what might. Being then in the heyday of youth, I thoroughly enjoyed the rough, unconventional life. Practice among the cattle camps partook very much of the nature of army life, and gave zest to the more hundrum parts of a doctor's life. But nothing so much attracted me as the opportunity for shooting large game; I am a natural-born sportsman, fond of the rife and shotgun, but in the East most of the shooting was confined to the latter arm, as squirrels and quail were the largest game to be found. So when I found myself in a land where buffalo and antelope were to be had for the hunting, you may be sure I was delighted and lost no opportunity to gratify my lazy, shiftless Indians, cowboys, gamblers and desperae to be had for the hunting, you may be sure I delighted and lost no opportunity to gratify my was delighted and lost no opportunity to gratify my taste.

But, although buffalo came within fifty miles of us and destroyed the crops of the settlers. I had never been able to get a shot at them until I had lived in E— for nearly a year. Then occurred the adventure which I am about to relate. It was early in October, and during the most beautiful Indian summer weather, we had been hearing reports of immense numbers of buffalo on the Upper Arkansas River, which were drifting slowly southward to the winter pastures. One-evening Judge Miller, a warm friend and chronic patient of mine, came into my office. He was quite excited, and broke forth into speech immediately:

"Now is our time, doctor; we have been waiting for a year to go on a buffalo hunt, and now I can get a permit to go on a construction train as far as Dodge City, where we can get horses and go to the hunting grounds in a few hours. What do you say? Can you go?"

The Judge was an enthusiastic sportsman, a good shot, and an all-round good fellow. He had resigned a position on the Supreme bench in Minnesota to seek a milder climate on account of bronchial trouble, and spent much of his time in outdoor exercise in our balmy climate. We were great chums, and I confess, his proposition met my warmest approval, so the matter was speedily arranged, and we were soon preparing to start at 11 oclock the same night.

Ladies in the Party.

Now it so happened that my wife and the Judge's wife had also a great longing to see the lordly bison on his native heath, and both of them put up a plea to go along on the proposed excursion. At first we argued stoutly against the idea of carrying two ladies along on a rough-and-tumble trip, as this was likely to be urging the fatigue of the journey, the danger of Indians, and everything we could think of, but of no avail. For you know that "when a woman will she will, and that's the end on't." And to tell the truth I was secretly proud of the pluck of these little women who shared our deprivations on the frontier, and I-thought they ought to have a chance at any fun that could be gotten out of our rather barren existence. So, in the outcome, the 11 o'clock construction-train on the Santa Fé found a party of four, instead of two, ready to board it.

We were well equipped and provisioned, had plenty of blankets and assorted guns—among the rest two small revolving Colt's rifles for the use of the ladies. These were vicious little weapons at short range, but not much good for over two hundred yards. The Judge snorted at the little "popguns," as he called them, and later experience showed that they were far more than ornamental.

later experience showed that they were far more than ornamental.

Shortly after daybreak we reached the terminus of the railroad, at a construction camp about four miles from Fort Dodge. It was upon the north bank of the Arkansas River, a sluggish stream about half a mile in width and filled with bars and quicksand islands, a most treacherous stream. A town of tents alone showed signs of human occupancy of a lovely valley, which now, at a period thirty years later, is a very garden spot of fertility. Here, through the kindness of the superintendent of construction, we were able to procure a team of cayeuses, and an old frontiersman for a driver. His knowledge of the habits and hibitat of the buffalo enabled us to speedily get onto their grazing ground and have a glorious day's sport. After an openair breakfast, cooked by the ladles, we at once set off down the river to begin our work of destruction.

Just as we were about to start, two young fellows from the East, who had been taking some practical instruction in civil engineering, came to us with the request that they be allowed to join our party for the hunt. They were about to return to their homes, and they wished to be able to entertain their eastern hunt. They were about to return to their homes, and they wished to be able to entertain their eastern fiends with some hair-raising stories about buffalo-hunting and Indians. We demurred a little at first, owing to the overcrowded condition of our vehicle, but finally consented, feeling that, as the driver suggested, the stronger our party the safer we would be in case of an encounter with unfriendly Indians. Of this, however, we had but little fear, as we had a rather low opinion of the stories told about Indian raids and outrages, as in our more thickly-settled region we seldom gave them a thought. But when we came to Fort Dodge, on our way down the river, the commandant came out to meet us, and insisted that we leave the ladies at the fort. He told us that the Arapahoss and Comanches were very dangerous, and we would be hunting upon their grounds, which always irritated hunting upon their grounds, which always irritated them. And, moreover, the very fact that we had ladies in our party would make it much more likely that they would attack us. He was very much in earnest, and we began to see that these Indians might be very dif-ferent from the lazy beggars we had been accustomed to at home.

They Were Determined to "See theFun,"

But again the woman's will prevailed. They hadn't traveled all night in a cattle-car to spend a day in a fort—not much. They were going to see the fun, too, 'Indians be hanged. So with laugh and banter they had their way, and we left the good, old colonel sorrowful, only we promised faithfully that we would by no means risk a night on the onen prairie.

only we promised faithfully that we would by no means risk a night on the open prairie.

The beauty of the day and the invigorating coolness of the morning air soon dispelled any unpleasant thoughts suggested by the colonel, and we were all in high spirits by the time we reached the shooting grounds. We had seen a few scattered groups of buffalo on the foothills as we wended down the river, but it was only after we had gone about fifteen miles below the fort that we began to get among the large herds. Turning the bend of the river and around a sharp knoll we suddenly came upon four huge stags. low the fort that we began to get among the large herds. Turning the bend of the river and around a sharp knoll we suddenly came upon four huge stags, which were tearing up the sand with their horns and pawing it over their backs. In a moment we were all wild with excitement, and wanted to jump from the wagon to get a shot at them, but the driver bade us sit still, and he would drive us much near than we could get on foot. He knew their habits, as we soon found, for instead of galloping away, as they would have done from a hunter on foot, they stood staring curiously at the wagon until we were within one hundred and fifty yards of them. Then, unable any longer to restrain ourselves, we compelled the driver to stop, and we prepared to fire. Just then the Judge proposed that he who killed the first game should be the guest of the party, and be exempt from camp duty. "Agreed, you take the one on the left and I the one on the right. Give the word." "Fire!" And we both pulled trigger at the same instant, but there was only one report. The Judge's gun had failed to respond, owing to a defective cartridge. His language was unorthodox, notwithstanding his Methodist proclivities. But, to my surprise, all four stags started off at a clumsy gallop, swaying their big heads up and down, as though to get themselves in motion. I was chagrined at my apparent failure, for I had aimed point blank at my quarry's heart, and at that short distance I could not see how I Could ge get back to the fort in the darkness, and, if so, what was the use when we wanted to come back again next day for more shooting. The driver protested that it was too dangerous to attempt to drive among the washouts and ravines at night. We had seen no sign of Indians all day, and had gotten over the impression made by the colonel in the morning. So we decided to go to the river and camp for the night. This was only a mile away, and we soon found a place exactly suited to our purposes. The fine thick turf was very inviting to our weary bodies, and an abundance of driftwood from the river's bank gave us material for a good campfire. We purposes. The fine thick turf was very inviting to our weary bodies, and an abundance of driftwood from the river's bank gave us material for a good campfire. We had saved some fine young steaks from our day's shooting; so with the help of the ladies we soon had a good suppc. After supper, lighting my pipe, my wife and I started for a stroll in the gloaming. The sun had set, bu. it was still quite light, and in that clear atmosphere objects could be distinguished at quite a distance. We had gone several hundred yards from the camp, upon some rising ground, and were gazing in wonder at the scene before us. It was one never to be forgotten. Casting our eyes up and down the river and as far as vision could reach was one moving mass of brown bodies. It was the hour for the buffalces' daily drink, and they were coming from miles back upon the range to drink and wallow for a while and then go back to their grazing until the next day. It is entirely within bounds to say that fifty thousand of these huge animals were within the scope of our vision, and these were but a small faction of the countless herds extending miles and miles up and down the river. Who could have predicted that within a quarter of a century these noble beasts, America's emblem, would be extinct?

I was gazing, lost in contemplation, when my wife suddenly seized my hand and said, "What is that?" pointing to the foothill nearest the river. Looking in the direction indicated, I saw an Indian on a cayeuse cautiousy approaching our camp. He evidently avoided observation, and kept under cover of the high grass and bushes. He approached to within a short distance of our unsuspecting comrades, evidently unaware that he was himself the object of observation. After reconnoitering our position carefully, he scurried back, and was lost to sight in the gathering dagkness. But I had seen enough. He was an Arapahoe, and a cruel-had missed him. But the driver shouted: "You've got him, doctor. Look at his tail!" And, behold, it was curled over his back, like a pig's tall, while the other three carried theirs straight out behind. "That's the way they always do when they're hit," said he. And just then, as if in answer to his words, the huge beast stopped and began to cough, the blood flowing from mouth and nostrils. After a moment, he lay down, while the others disappeared around the bend. A kindly bullet finished him, and I was the hero of the hour. I don't think the Judge enjoyed his bargain, for he was an acknowledged shot, and expected to reap the benefit of our agreement.

So began the day, and so it continued. Soon we were in the midst of countless groups of feeding buffalô, which only shifted their ground when we got unpleasantly near them, but did not leave the range. We shot and shot, always at a range which made a miss al-antly near them, but did not leave the range. We shot and shot, always at a range which made a miss almost impossible, but such is their tenacity of life that it often took half a score of ounce balls to bring one to his knees. It was rare sport for a time, but at length it degenerated into mere slaughter, and seemed more like shooting cattle in a barnyard than honest hunting. Along toward night I had brought down a veteran whose splintered horns showed him to be the hero of many a combat. I had poured a half-dozen bullets into him before its sank sullenly to the ground. Our two visiting comrades, who were armed only with revolvers, came up and asked me to let them put the finishing touches on him, so that they could honestly say to their home friends that they had actually killed a buffalo. So, turning away, I left them to their work.

Hunters Who Were Hunted.

Hunters Who Were Hunted.

I had walked a short distance down the slope, and had heard several revolver shots behind me, when, suddenly, I heard shouts of alarm, and turning round I beheld the two "brave boys" on the dead run down the hill and the old "vet." in full pursuit. Their pepering with the revolvers had irritated him into one final effort, and he had suddenly risen and charged them. The poor fellows were so badly "rattled" that they did not know enough to separate, but ran side by side like two schoolboys in a footrace, and their pursuer was rapidly gaining upon them. Stifling my laughter, I waived them to separate, and allowed the old bull to charge straight at me. When he was about thirty paces from me, with nose to the ground, I fired an ounce ball straight between his eyes, and his warlike career was over. But those boys had had enough of hunting (or being hunted) for the day, and went to stay with the wagon. Other incidents, ludicrous or exciting, sped the hours, when we suddenly wakened to the fact that the sun was just setting, and we at least twenbeheld the two "brave boys" on the dead run down looking wretch. He had seen our camp, and that there were women there. No doubt they had been watching us in our wanton sport during the day, and were enraged at our intrusion into their hunting grounds. The colonel's warning and earnest entreaty returned afresh and with increased meaning. Hurrying back to camp we told what we had seen. The bronzed old driver actually turned pale under his tan. "Let's hitch up and git out of this," he said, and began to throw the harness on his ponies. But after a monment he stopped. "It's no use. They will follow us and caich us in less than five miles."

"Do you think there is any danger?" asked the Judge.

"Danger?" snorted the driver. "If there's one of us except the women alive in the morning it will be a

Why do you say 'except the women?' " again asked Judge.

"Why do you say except the woll the Judge.
"Oh, they never kill women," he replied, with a look so full of meaning that it froze the blood in our veins. "I didn't suppose that there was a red devil within fifty miles of here, or I wouldn't have come for a farm. But it's too late now to whine, so let's git ready fur a fight." And we began to follow his advise with sinking hearts.

By common consent the driver became commanderin-chief. He was an old Indian fighter, and knew their ways. First in the line of defense we looked to our arms. Fortunately, we were well equipped. Three Winchesters and abundant ammunition for them, two Colt's revolving rifles, already mentioned; five long navy revolvers and two Derringers completed our outfit.
We numbered five men and two women; and all fairlygood shots. Possibly we might stand them off until relief came from some source. At least, we had no choice, and we could only prepare for the worst. Old Bob, the driver, told us there was plenty of time, as the Indians never make an attack until near daybreak, so we examined the ground to see how we stood for defense. Fortunately, it was admirably adapted to our needs. The river was at a low stage, and a beach of so we examined the ground to see how defense. Fortunately, it was admirably adapted to our needs. The river was at a low stage, and a beach of solid sand extended from the water to the bank, upon which we were encamped. This bank was about four feet perpendicular down to the sand beach, affording good natural breastwork behind which to fight if it a good natural breastwork behind which to fight if it came to the worst.

Old Bob slid away through the grass to reconnoiter, but soo returned with the information that Arapahoe sentinels were posted in a semi-circle around us from the river below our camp to the river above it, making escape impossible. Evidently they did not intend to lose their prey. Our sturdy commander told us that our best policy would be to feign ignorance of our perils.

and thus induce carelessness on the part of our enemies. So we built a big fire and went about the usual camp duties as though nothing were suspected. Old Bob event went so far as to sing a lusty song, with more noise than tune. But as for the rest of us, we had hard work to keep up even a semblance of cheerfulness.

About 9 o'clock the moon rose full and clear, which meant security for us for a time, as the savages would not risk discovery on the open ground, which, fortunately for us, was clear of bushes and high grass for several hundred feet from the river bank. They would wait until they thought us all asleep in the small hours toward morning. But, oh, how slowly the hours crept along! The agony of suspense made us wish that they would pass more rapidly and make an end of this awward morning. But, oh, how slowly the hours crept along! The agony of suspense made us wish that they would pass more rapidly and make an end of this awful nightmare. Our commander had laid his plans very carefully and clearly. Our wagon and camp equipage stood about fifty steps from the river. Around the fire, which we kept burning very brightly, we spread our blankets and lay down for such reat as we could get. One of our eastern boys had been stationed in the bushes to keep a bright lookout on our enemies. Our guns and ammunition had been carried cautiously to our improvised breastwork behind the perpendicular bank; also a small supply of food in case of protracted siege. Then our stations were assigned to each, extending for a space of about fifty yards along the bank. We found that, taking the revolvers into account—and each of our plucky little women insisted upon using one and doing her share—we could give the enemy a salute of sixty-three rounds without reloading. And, for convenience and speed in reloading, we placed cartridges upon the bank within easy reach. All this was done quietly and early in the evening, and then we spread ourselveds around on our blankets to keep up the deception we were practicing until time for action arrived.

About 12 o'clock old Bob said it was time to get into "the trenches," and one by one, at long intervals, so as not to attract the attention of any of the red rascals who might be near enough to see, we took our places on the beach. Our blankets, carefully rolled to resemble sleeping forms, were left around the fire. The horses were allowed to remain picketed a little way from the wagon, a few sticks were added to the fire, and everything looked just like a peaceful camp of unsuspecting traveleps:

Bob then took the place of our sentinel, after giving us very careful instruction in regard to every particular. We were to lie quiet until his return gave us warning of the enemy's approach; we were to let them "rush the camp," and not fire until we were each sure of his the camp," and not fire until we were each sure of his man; and, more than all, to remember that death was far preferable to capture, which meant torture to us and worse for the women. For more than two hours we crouched shivering behind the damp river bank, and, oh, what thoughts filled our minds! of home and friends and all the dear associations which might never be ours again; vain regrets that we had not heeded the colonel's well-meant warning, and maledictions upon ourselves for our folly. But through it all those two brave women made no complaint; only a dry sob now and then showed the tense strain on heart and nerve, and now and then a whispered word or a pressure of the hand. But there was no breaking down, no outcry; instead, the few spoken words were words of cheer, or prayers that went straight up to the Helper of the helpless.

So slowly passed the time that we had almost begun prayers that went straight up to the Helper of the helpless.

So slowly passed the time that we had almost begun to hope that some merciful providence had interposed in our behalf, when, with a slight rustling of the grass, old Bob appeared, crawling like a hugo centipede, and in low tones said: "They're coming—bout fifty of 'em. Now keep your heads. Don't fire till I do, but get a sure bead on 'em. When you do begin; pump it into 'em strong. Keep still as death."

The Rush of the Red Devils Well Met.

We hadn't long to wait. A waving of the high grass, the snorting of our penies, and then, with a frightful yell, the palnted devils rushed into our camp to tomahawk the sleeping victims. The full moon, now well down in the West, made every form plainly visible. Before they reached the smouldering campfire, with its surrounding blankets, old Bob raised a most diabolical screech and fired his Winchester full at the breast of the leader, who plunged forward on his face and moved no more. Seven shots rang out from the riverbed, and others in quick succession, and the ground around the campfire was covered with writhing forms. Our sixty-three shots poured into them at short range, before they had time to locate us, completely terrified them, and without firing a single shot, or even securing the horses, the uninjured savages broke for the hills.

And then happened a most surprising thing. A bugle blast, strong and clear, rang out on the still night air, scattering shots and yells, and in a moment more the good colonel from Fort Dodge, with a band of brave blue-coated troopers, dashed into our little camp. He was more than delighted to find us all alive and unhurt, as from the rapid firing he feared he had come too late. And then there was handshaking and

And those two brave little women, who hadn't whimpered in the face of death, just quit playing heroine and, woman-fashion, had a good hysterical cry. But we loved them all the more for it. It showed that they were women still.

SARASATE AND HIS IMITATOR.

[Philadelphia Evening Post:] Of Sarasate, the famous violinist, a pleasant story was told the other evening at a reception in Washington. The great master enjoys nothing better than giving or receiving jokes. Sometimes his bon mots are a trifle savage. One evening at a social function a young violinist, who had a much higher opinion of his own musical ability than any one else, had the bad taste to play one of Sarasate's compositions with variations of, his own creation. The latter were inappropriate and inartistic and jarred upon the ears of all.

The performer ended his work and made his way to Sarasate, doubtless expecting a word of recognition or praise. Sarasate said nothing, and the player finally asked, "I hope you recognize that piece?"

Sarasate prompty replied, "Certainly. It was a piece of impudence."

A STUDY OF SPIDERS.

FACTS OF MUCH INTEREST THAT ARE NOT GENERALLY KNOWN.

By a Special Contributor.

PIDERS are not insects, as most people think. There is precisely the same relationship between a spider and an insect that there is between a cow and a codfish. The cow and the fish are both vertebrates, and the spider and the insect are both annulates; and the spider and the insect are both annulates; but there the resemblance ceases. In every other point of structure they differ widely from each other. The spider has eight legs, whereas an insect cannot have more than six. The nervous system is constructed on a totally different system, and so are the circulation and respiration. The eyes are different, the insects having many compound eyes, and the spider never having more than eight, and all of them simple. Then a spider has no separate head the head spider never having more than eight, and all of them simple. Then a spider has no separate head, the head and the rax being fused together. Neither does the spider pass-through the series of developments which we call "transformations." When the young spider is hatched, it is a spider, and retains the same shape through its whole life. Again, no insect that is at present known can spin silken threads: Take the silk-worm as a familiar example. The silk is spun by the caterpillar, and not by the moth. Now, the spider can spin threads throughout the whole of its life. It possesses moreover, the facility of producing different spin threads throughout the whole of its life. It possesses, moreover, the faculty of producing different kinds of silk, according to the object for which it is needed. If we watch the first of these creatures, we may see all the three silks produced. The web of tha diadem spider is made of radiating cables, like the spokes of a wheel, and having a slight thread wound spirally over the spokes. The whole web is suspended by cables like those which form the spokes, and guy ropes of similar structure support it on every side. A blue-bottle fig now comes buzzing along and blunders against one of the supporting cables. It is not arrested by the cable, but falls upon the net, where it is at once caught. If we examine the web with a tolerably-powerful magnifying-glass, we see that the cables and spokes are smooth, while the spiral thread is covered with little globules of a gummy character. There are 1400 of these globules in each inch of thread, and on an average a complete web contains 87,000 of them. These globules are like bird-lime, and the moment an insect touches one of them with its leg or wing it is held tightly by the gum.

Spiders as Aeronauts.

If you anchor a pole in a body of water, leaving the pole above the surface, and put a spider upon it, he will exhibit a marvelous intelligence by his plans of escape. At first he will spin a web several inches long and hang to one end while he allows the other to float off in the wind, in the hope that it will strike some object. Of course this plan proves a failure. He waits until the wind changes, and then sends another silken bridge floating off in another direction. Another failure is followed by several other similar attempts, until all the points of the compass have been tried. But neither the resources nor the seasoning powers of the spider are exhausted. He climbs to the top of the pole and energetically goes to work to construct a silken balloon. He has no hot air with which to inflate it, but he has the power of making it buoyant. When he gets his balloon finished, he does not go off upon the mere supposition that it will carry him, as men often do, but he fastens it to a guy rope, the other end of which he attaches to the island pole upon which he is a prisoner. He then gets into his aerial vehicle, while it is made fast, and tests it to see whether its dimension are capable of bearing him away. He often finds that he has made it too small, in which case he hauls it down, takes it all apart, and constructs it on a larger and better plan. A spider has been seen to make three different balloons before he became satisfied with his experiment. Then he will get in, snap his guy-rope, and sail away to land as gracefully and as supremely independent of his eurroundings as could well be imagined.

A Spider With a Diving-bell.

Most peope have seen or heard of the diving-bell, which is considered to be a great invention of man. And yet, long before man though of his diving-bell, the water-spider had hers, in which she reared her numerous family. There are several remarkable things about this nest; one of them is the manner in which it is made. Man makes a great deal of fuss when he wants a diving-bell; there is metal to be got and melted down, casting and riveting to be done, and then the great bell has to be swung down through the water. The water-spider makes no fuss at all, and asks for no help—not even her husband's. In that business-like manner which characterizes all spiders, she boldly plunges into the water and walks down the stem of a pond weed. When she has selected a suitable position for her silken palace, she fixes a number of strong lines in all directions for anchorage. Then in the midst of these she constructs a beautiful web, somewhat in the shape of a thimble, but not quite so large. It is full of water, and therefore not like a diving-bell. How is the water to be got out and replaced with air?

The old naturalists explained the difficulty in this way. They said that the spider so arranged her web on the stems of the plants that the little bubbles of coxygen gas which all green plants give off should be caught in this trap and retained. The true explanation is far more wonderful; she carries the whole of the air required from the surface! Now, look at this spider resting on the leaf before us. Her body and legs are covered with grayish hairs. When I touch her she plunges quickly into the water. The movement is so quick that the air has not time to escape from hew hairy coat, and she goos down surrounded by a globule of air. When across the threshold of her own home, she coat, and she goes down surrounded by a globule of air. When across the threshold of her own home, she carefully dislodges this air by rubbing herself with her legs. The liberated bubble immediately rises to the roof of her house, and there remains. In this way she at length fills the whole bell, and takes up her position in it, always head downward. Here she passes the winter, keeping snug and quiet until the warm days of spring invite her to the surface in quest of files and other small insects. About this time the spider comes to inspect the house, and, finding it hardly large enough for two, they bring down more air, which expands the

Soon the lady of the house constructs a neat and comfortable little cocoon, which she fixes in the roof of her nest and deposits about one hundred eggs in it.

Spiders' Thrend and How They are Spun.

Dr. H. C. McCook, the well-known naturalist, has been studying the mode of constructing webs prevailing among the orb-weaving spiders, and he seems to have confirmed his previous opinion that the silk-line framework or foundation of their webs is laid, in the first instance, by the help of a current or air carrying the thread. In a number of cases Dr. McCook observed, the spiders passing from point to point by means of lines emitted from their spinnerets and entangled spon adjacent foliage. These mimic "wire bridges" were of various lengths, owing to the direction of the wind and the fixed objects around it. Lines of two feet to four feet were frequent; lines of seven feet to ten feet occurred pretty often; one line had been measured for a length of twenty-six feet; and in several instances they had been observed stretching across country roads of thirty to forty feet in width. He had also observed some of these carried by the wind directly from the spider's spinnerets; had; watched the entanglement; had seen the spider draw the thread taut, and finally cross upon them. These air-laid bridge lines were often used for the frames of the orb. The observations of Dr. McCook show nothing like a deliberate purpose in connecting the point of occupancy with any special opposite point. Many of the bridge lines were evidently used for the frames of the orb. The observations of Dr. McCook show nothing like a deliberate purpose in connecting the point of occupancy with any special opposite point. Many of the bridge lines were evidently tentative, and were chiefly at the mercy of the breeze, although some observations semed to indicate a limited control of the thread by manipulation.

Some ten years ago a French missionary started the systematic rearing of two kinds of spiders for their web, and the Board of Trade Journal states that a spider-web factory is now in successful operation at Chalais-Meudon, near Paris, where ropes are made of spider-web, intended for balloons for the French military aëronautic section. The spiders, are arranged in groups of twelve above a reel, upon which the threads are wound. It is by 100 means easy work for the spiders, for they are not released until they have furnished from thirty to forty yards of thread each. The web is washed, and thus freed of the outer reddish and sticky cover. Eight of the washed threads are then taken together, and of this rather strong yarn cords are woven which are stronger and much lighter than cords of silk of the same thickness.

Sago souffle with raspberries is an easy dessert to prepare. Shake the saucepan now and then to prevent burning. When the mixture is cold, stir in the stiffly-beaten whites of eight eggs. Fill a souffle mold, and bake in a moderate oven.

An easy way to make a fruit pudding is to take strawberries, raspberries, currants, or any small fruit, stew, with sugar, pour into a bowl; scatter over it stale bread crumbs, put a weight over it, a saucer, say, with a flatiron on it. When quiet cold, put the pudding on ice until ready to serve. If it has been well pressed down, it will turn out nicely on a dish if you turn the bowl upside down. Serve it with Devonshire cream.

A cherry pyramid is a more elaborate affair, but quite worth any trouble you may take in its making. Wash and stew a quart of cherries, first removing the stones. Roll out a biscuit crust about half an inch thick, and cut out a circle six inches in diameter; cover it thickly with cherries to within an inch of the edge, and scatter sugar over them. Put a circle of pasteboard about four and one-half inches in diameter over them, then a layer of cherries, leaving half an inch around the edge. Then a circle of pasteboard again about three and one-half inches in diameter, then cherries again, and finally an apex of pasteboard about two inches across. Steam this pudding on a plate for about two hours. Serve it with a hard sauce made of butter and sugar. A quarter of a cup of butter to half a cup of sugar are the right proportions.

A Swiss cream with cherries or raspberries is served in glasses, and made like this: Take one pint of thick, sweet cream, mix in one-half pound of sugar, the rind and juice of one lemon, three wineglasses of white wine—California hock, for example. Stir all this together thoroughly and then put it on ice for a few hours. Whip the mixture as you would whip cream, with an egg-beater or a cream chairn, removing the foam and fill the glasses until you have used all. Place as mall maccaroon and a few cherries or other fruit on top of each glass of the cream.

OUR DUTY IN THE PHILIPPINES.

[New York Sun:] It is the obvious duty of the United States to provide the Philippine Islands with a United States to provide the Philippine Islands with a good and secure government, for they are now under our authority, and we are responsible for them to civilization. Exactly what form that government will take must be determined by time and experience; that it will eventually be in strict accordance with American political principles is as inevitable as that meantime and afterward it will conduce to the liberty and welfare of the inhabitants to an infinitely greater degree than has done any other which they have ever had. But before a just and orderly government for the Philippines can be established, it is manifestly necessary that armed resistance by an unrepresentative band of the natives shall be subdued. First of all, there must be peace and order, and the sole purpose of our military operations is to compel such tranquillity by putting down the lawless effort of this band to obtain despotic control of territory belonging to the United States.

AMERICANS ABROAD.

THEY SPEND MORE THAN ONE HUN-DRED MILLIONS A YEAR.

By a Special Contributor.

UCH has been said and written about the great number of Americans who go abroad every year. but few persons not connected with ocean transportation realize what an immense business has been built up in travel abroad. The bald statement that 150,000 Americans will go to Europe this year conveys no adequate impression of its proportions.

These figures, it must be remembered, relate only to Atlantic travel. There are increasingly large numbers of persons who start on their wanderings from Pacific ports. This travel has received an unusual simulus this year from the events which have turned the attention of Americans to the Far East. Counting in the voyagers to the Orient, to South American and other less visited points there are probably not less than 200,000 Americans who will visit foreign shores this summer. If they all went on one grand excursion it would require a train of passenger cars thirty miles long and a fleet a train of passenger cars thirty miles long and a fleet of 500 steamers forming in single file a steaming line 100 miles long, to convey them.

Nearly two-thirds of these travelers want to leave this country in May, June or July, and to return in August, September and October. Therefore, the tide of foreign travel is marked by movements as regular as those of ocean itself. It rises sharply at the beginning of May, reaches its height toward the end of June, and commences to ebb along in August. The outward movement is at its height now, but there are indications that the return flow will begin somewhat later than usual this season.

It is during the six months of summer travel that the companies operating the great ocean lines make profits, enabling them to keep their magnificent steamers in operation the year around.

Seventeen Million Dollars to Steamship Lines.
There are thirty steamship lines carrying passengers There are thirty steamship lines carrying passengers from New York, some twenty from other Atlantic ports, and a dozen from different points on the Pacific Coast. Of course many of those do their principal business in freight, and have only a small passenger capacity. The great passenger carrying lines which operate the fast liners, number about a dozen altogether. These various companies run about one hundred and fifty ships, beside freight steamers and sailing vassels.

The Americans who lament so vast an expenditure of money for foreign travel would be surprised to learn how large a proportion of it remains in this country.

Nearly all the voyagers must travel some distance by rail before beginning their ocean journeys. The amount spent in this way and in unusual expenses in preparations for the journey is at least $25 for each person. This makes an item of $5,000,000 to begin with, which goes directly to American laborers and tradesmen. Every person who goes abroad, too, finds it necessary to purchase extra clothing and traveling supplies to the extent of at least $50.

All the liners outfit for their voyages on this side.

American meats, American canned vegetables and American ice cream supply their tables. But the men who sail and own the vessels are for the most part foreigners and their earnings go into the pockets of for-foreigners and their earnings go into the pockets of foreign shareholders.

The cost of first cabin passage by all the great liners is $100 during the summer season. Second cabin passage costs from $40 to $80. About two-thirds of the Americans going abroad travel first cabin and one-third second cabin. Accordingly, if the estimated number of Americans go abroad this season, they will pay the steamship companies something like $17,000,000, or very nearly the amount of the Spanish indemnity.

What We Pay into Foreign Pockets.

What We Pay into Foreign Pockets.

The cost of the stay in Europe, or wherever the tourist may elect to roam, varies, of course, according to his means, tastes and methods. The rule ordinarily laid down is an average of $10 per day for each person to cover all the ordinary expenses of travel. As the length of the usual stay is from six weeks to two months, the outlay for each person, judged by this standard, will amount to between $400 and, $600. Of course there are many who spend several times this amount, and an average of $500 for each person is a very conservative estimate. According to this calculation, the amount spent by Americans on foreign touring this summer will not fall short of $100,000,000, or more than is spent by the governments of the smaller European countries for all their expenses.

The Great Hem of Tips.

The Great Item of Tips.

One item in our foreign travel account that amounts to surprising proportions is the expenditure for tips. The American abroad realizes that he is expected to tip,

The American abroad realizes that he is expected to tip, and if inexperienced he is likely to overdo the matter, distributing his fees with a lavishness that excites the contempt rather than the admiration of the recipients. Five per cent. of the amount purchased is the established European tip. Waiters in the restaurants expect that; more they do not appreciate or understand. But even if Americans adhere to this rule, which most of them do not, their outlay in tips and fees amounts to a pretty penny in the course of a season.

The tipping on shipboard varies according to taste or will, but on a land tour through Europe the fees to waiters, porters, guides to public buildings and a horde of unnecessary officials need not be large. Twenty-five dollars for each traveler is a meager allowance, but at this estimate it adds $5,000,000 to the bill paid by American visitors to the old countries.

Another Five Millions.

Another item that reaches to about the same figure is the money expended for souvenirs. Every American who goes abroad brings home a number of little gifts for his or her friends, and this outlay is seldom less than $25 for each traveler. The custom of shopping abroad has fallen off considerably of late on account of our rigid customs inspection and the national pride in our products. But every woman who goes to Paris spends from $25 to $500 for the "perfectly lovely" creations of the Parisian shops. Thus another item of millions is added to the account.

From these figures it will be seen that by a conserva-Another item that reaches to about the same figure is tive estimate $150,000,000 will be spent this summer by Americans who are going to foreign countries, and at least $100,000,000 of this amount will be spent abroad. The compensating return from Europeans visiting America is too small to be taken into account. It is almost a certainty that the close of this season will give Americans the right to claim the distinction of being the greatest travelers on earth. This honor has been claimed for them before, and for years they have been second only to the English, but now they bid fair to outrank their Anglo-Saxon cousins as well as the rest of the world. the rest of the world.

Visitors to Paris.

Visitors to Paris.

Perhaps there is no better index of foreign travel than is afforded by Paris for the reason that almost every person who tours on the continent visits the French capital. Inasmuch as the Parisian police department keeps a record of the number of travelers stopping in the city, it is possible to gain some reliable information from their statistics.

In 1885, according to the reports, a little more than 20,000 Americans visited Paris, while the number of English visitors was 35,000. In 1895 the number of Americans had increased to 42,000, while of English there were 45,000, and of Germans, 32,000. During the coming season, estimating the increase of Parisian Americans had increased to 42,000, while of English there were 45,000, and of Germans, 32,000. During the coming season, estimating the increase of Parisian visitors from the probable increase in the number of Americans going abroad, the number recorded by the Parisian authorities will be more than 60,000, while the English and Germans are hardly likely to approach the 50,000 mark. In the amount of money spent and the distances traversed, divergence between the Europeans and Americans is even more striking.

Putting together the total distance covered by this American army of foreign occupation, and it cannot be less than 500,000,000 miles, or enough for a round trip excursion to the centar of our solar system, with side trips to Mars, Jupiter and all the intervening planets. If a party of 100 persons set out to cover the distance traversed in a single season by the Americans who go abroad, they would each be compelled to travel 200 times around the world, a task which would keep them busy at the highest speed they could attain for a matter of fifty years, a lifetime of activity.

About 10 per cent. of those who go abroad travel by some one of the numerous systems of personally conducted tours. This method of sight-seeing is not so much in favor as formerly for the cheaper kinds of touring, but is coming to be adopted by those who demand all the luxuries of modern travel with none of its inconveniences. It is being generally adopted for trips to distant places and to points off the beaten track of the ordinary tourist, such as the Orient, Australia, Northern Spain and South America.

REMARKABLE DEVELOPMENT OF THE EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

By a Special Contributor.

HE life of the National Educational Association, like the life of the nation, began in the city of Philadelphia. On the 26th of August, 1857, in response to a call that had been issued the year before, a few prominent educators, mostly presidents of the few State teachers' associations that had been recently organized, met in that city and effected an organization under the name of the National Teachers' Association. This name was, in 1870, changed to its present form. The first regular meeting after this initial one was held in Cincinnati the following year, although only five of the thirty-eight who had signed the constitution the year before were present. Zalmon Richards, the venerable educator of Washington, D. C., was the president at this first regular meeting. The next meeting was held in the city of Washington in 1860. There were no meetings in the years 1861 1862 and 1867.

Up to the year 1870, the papers and discussions were given before the general meetings as a whole. But in that year two other associations, viz., the American Normal Association, organized in 1864, and the National Superintendents' Association, organized in 1865, were incorporated into the National Educational Association as departments. Other departments, touching special features of educational work, were organized within the parent association, thus greatly broadening its in-

After 1870, the year 1884 was the next memorable milestone in the association's history. Previous to 1884 financial difficulties were a constant menace to the permanence and ultimate success of the organization. The necessary bills had been met by the voluntary contributions of enthusiastic members of the associa-But it was necessarily only a question of time until the patience of these friends of the association and of the cause of education would overcome their enthusiasm and the machinery of the association would stop through sheer lack of lubrication. But in 1884, at the great meeting at Madison, Wis., the association experienced a decided boom—a boom not only in numbers and in educational enthusiasm, but in money, which is proverbially necessary to make not only "the mare," but various other things, "go." It was a day of booms; but the association's boom, unlike most other booms, did not die. It was a lusty child to begin with, and it has grown stronger from year to year, until today it is a veritable glant.

In that year the charge for annual membership, was bers and in educational enthusiasm, but in money, which

In that year the charge for annual membership was raised from $1 to $2. Also, life memberships were issued to active members on the payment of $20, and life directorships on the payment of $100. Likewise, perpetual directorships were issued to educational bodies, like boards of education and minor educational associations, on the payment of $100. Thus, a permanent fund of several thousand dollars has been accumulated which is veryly edded to and which is a guaranteed.

various ways, one of which is in the ability of the organization to publish its entire proceedings each year in book form. The bound volume contains verbatim reports of all the papers, addresses and discussions before the general association, and the various departments. Besides this, it contains lists of all officers and committees, reports of committees, the constitution and bylaws, matters of business connected with the association and lists of the entire membership, classified by States and Territories. Each member of the body who pays the annual membership fee of $2 is entitled to a copy of the proceedings.

The first meeting of the association held west of the Mississippi River was at Topeka, Kan., in 1886. It was considered a debatable question whether it was best to take the association so far into the "wild and woolly" West. But the meeting was, nevertheless, a success, and the association, after going east again for a year to rest and recuperate, once more decided to move West. So the next year, 1888, drawing a long breath, it sprung clear over the Rocky Mountains and held its meeting at San Francisco. This meeting was a most successful one. The membership reached 7216, California alone enrolling 4278 members, which is the largest number ever enrolled from any one State. The meeting in Los Angeles in the coming July will thus be the second meeting in California, and the second west of the Rockies.

Having honored the West with its presence, the association next invaded the South, holding a very successful meeting at Nashville, Tenn., in 1889, In 1891, the annual meeting was held at Toronto, Can., the only time a meeting has been held outside of the United States. In 1895, the meeting was held at Denver. This meeting was noteworthy by reason of the large membership the number enrolled; viz., 11,237, being the highwater mark in the association's history.

The officers of the National Educational Association are as follows: President, twelve vice-presidents, secretary, together with the great association deaf, blind and feeble-minded, and the national council of education.

The national council of education is somewhat distinct from the other departments. It, like the other departments, has its own officers and separate meetings, but, unlike the other departments, it meets a few days before the general association convenes and has a constitution of its own. It is composed of a select number of the most eminent educators of the nation.

Each department has its own meeting place, its own officers and its characteristic programme of papers and discussions. The department meetings are held in the afternoons, while those of the general association are held in the mornings and evenings.

The teacher who attends a meeting of this great organization and, note-book in hand, expects to tabulate the information obtained from papers and discussions, is likely to be woefully disappointed. For, aside from the physical impossibility of attending fourteen or fifteen different department meetings in session at one and the same time, there is the excitement and confusion of large numbers of people, which will, necessarily, prevent the acquiring of very much exact knowledge. One can attend all of the general meetings, but the crush is so great that it is usually impossible to get near enough to hear any of the papers or discussions, at all, much less get any practical good from them. Then, the papers read at these meetings are generally of an abstract nature, which to merely hear read does one little good.

The attendance at the department meetings is smaller and the discussions more practical, so that the teacher may select his or her favorite one and attend it to some advantage.

But, generally speaking, the good the working teacher gots fiver the excitement.

may select his or her favorite one and attend it to some advantage.

But, generally speaking, the good the working teacher gets from these great meetings is not the actual information acquired. It is the mental and physical stimulus of travel and a change of scene and the inspiration that comes of contact with large numbers of persons engaged in working in the same cause. Then, the average teacher sees and hears the voices of the noted men and women of the profession. Five minutes of being in the magnetic presence and listening to the voices of such men as Col. F. W. Parker of the Cook county. Ill., Normal School, veteran of the civil war, as well as of the war against ignorance; Chancellor James H. Canfield of the Ohio State University, wonderful scholar and magnificent orator; J. M. Greenwood, treasurer of the association, the genial, gray-haired educator who for so many years has superintended the schools of Kansas City; John MacDonald, the witty Scotch editor of the Western School Journal; Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University, the brilliant scholar; Dr. William T. Harris, the venerable Commissioner of Education, and hundreds of other noted authors, speakers and thinkers, is worth more than whole libraries of printed lectures. Then, after all, why should one worry himself with note-book and pencil, when, if he is a member, the volume of proceedings will place the whole matter before him in the most complete form after the meeting is over.

The meeting to be held soon in Los Angeles promises to be one of the great meetings. Nothing is being left undone by the various local committees to make the visit of the great association to Los Angeles a pleasant one. The city will be turned over to the teachers to do with as they wish. Many "side trips" to mountains and seaside have been agranged for and it is contained to the contained and seaside have been agranged for and it is contained to the contained and seaside have been agranged for and it is contained to the contained to the contained to the conta ciations, on the payment of $100. Thus, a permanent fund of several thousand dollars has been accumulated, which is yearly added to and which is a guarantee of the stability of the association. As a still further assurance of permanence, this fund is invested in the best class of interest-bearing bonds. In the year 1886 the association took out articles of incorporation in the District of Columbia.

THE STAFF OF LIFE.

ACCOUNT OF THE BATTLE IN BEHALF OF PURE FOODS.

By a Special Contributor.

HERE are a good many people in this world interested in bread from the standpoint of food, as well as the standpoint of health. Adulteration in food products is an offense, or, if you desire a stronger term, a crime, which is being fought by municipalities, by States, and by nations with a flercer determination than ever before to bring the battle to a finish.

Leaving cut of consideration the occasional use various kinds of finely-powdered earths, etc., it is worth while considering the kind of adulteration now practiced in the manufacture of flour, from which the American laboring man gets his staff of life.

No doubt the men who adulterate their wheat flour with cornstarch console their consciences with some such reassuring thought that the adulterant is not only not poisonous, but uninjurious in its elements, and yet they are guilty of the most despicable piece of robbery known since meanness began, and those who eat it to the extent that the laboring men of the United States eat bread simply enter upon a certain, and not so very prolonged, period of starvation.

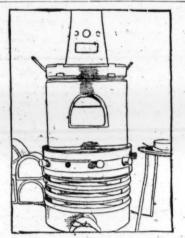

How Adulteration is Detected.

How Adulteration is Detected.

But, first, a word or two as to this adulteration and how the scientific men are discovering it—how they are working to render such adulteration as this in the future a practical impossibility.

The starch of the flour of every wheat berry and every corn kernel differ always and essentially as they come under the microscope. Take a sample of honest flour, and you will find every tiny grain to the last hundredth that comes into your field of vision as you move the slide below the lens, roundish in shape, every one of them, if cut in twain, showing a series of concentric circles, and a traverse section indicating the general form of a pair of dumb-bells.

When the corn-starch, like the wheat-starch, has been washed clear of all other elements, every grain, to the fartherest millionth, instead of being round, is angular, full of corners, the flat body of the grain usually showing from five to six sharp angles. In the center of the grain the lines are not circular, as in the wheat, but straight, starting from a well-defined spot in the heart of the grain of starch and radiating out in perfectly straight lines, from three to five or six lines in each grain.

Each one of these grains is inclosed in a wall of cellulose. The character of the starch on the interior of each is precisely the same, whether of corn or wheat. In the wheat flour, however, as nature has given it to man in tho wheat kernel, there is just the right proportion of starch for the needs of the human system, mixed with other ingredients which go to give the system. mixed with other ingredients which go to give the system its strength.

Why Adulteration Pays.

Why Adulteration Pays.

When the men who want to adulterate their flour find that wheat costs $1 and corn 25 cents a bushel, it is a very natural thing, following the bent of a crooked mind, to mix the corn-starch with the flour-starch. The two are of precisely the same character as to appear-

But the detective is there, too, and, aided by that chief of all detectives. Mother Nature, the scientific chemist takes the adulterated flour, washes it in cold water, so that every part of the gluten of the flour is cleared out, and then, placing a tiny portion of the flour, or, as it now stands, starch, in a little tube, he puts it in solution, colors it with iodine a beautiful purple, puts a drop between the thin pleces of glass for his slide, tucks it under the microscope, and there swimming together side by side as purple as a sunset in the land of the midnight sun, are the two types of starch grains, hundreds of them, the one round, the other angular, the one having concentric rings on its interior, the other with lines as lagged as the greenish radiations from a fractured pane of glass

It isn't a question of theory, but one of very cold, hard fact. The scientific chemist, especially the agricultural chemist, such a one as Prof. Harry Snyder of the State experiment station of the College of Agricultural chemist, such a one as Prof. Harry Snyder of the State experiment étation of the College of Agriculture in the University of Minnesota, doesn't have to depend upon any theories. He takes a sample of perfectly-pure wheat flour, tests it, finds the grains of starch of the one type. He takes a sample of pure corn-starch flour, the grains are all of one type and wholly different. He takes a sample of flour adulterated with corn-starch, and the two types appear. There is nothing left to chance.

But the adulterator knows his business. He has in-

But the adulterator knows his business. He has invented machinery which so rolls and powders the corn starch that, in some cases, the cell walls are broken down and the corn-starch blends into the wheat-flour starch. This would seem to be a blending beyond the power of the detective. But it is not. Prof. Snyder has been carrying on experiments which show that he will in the future—and, in fact, has already reached some decidedly satisfactory results—be able to detect the fraud even here, for by an iodine test he can tell the difference between a flour composed of mixed corn and wheat-starch grains even after the cell walls of the grains are broken down. By far the greater proportion of all the adulteration, however, is quickly discernible by the other test.

Is This Adulterated Flour Harmful?

A good many people have asked this question, but the answers have been, in many cases, quite vague—just such indefinite answers as would be apt to suit the man who is adulterating the such indefinite answers as would be apt to suit the man who is adulterating the such as well as the such as th who is adulterating.

There are three main elements in the wheat flour which make it the staff of life when it comes to bread—ash, for the formation of bone; starch for the heat of the body; gluten, or, in another word, protein, for the production of muscle. The gluten is made up of two substances, gluten and gliadin. The gliadin binds the flour together and makes it dough, the gluten prevents the dough from becoming soft and sticky. The gluten as a whole is the life-giving part of the bread. Now, suppose the man who gets his corn for 25 cents a bushel puts 40 per cent. more starch into his flour than he ought to. The man who eats bread made from this adulterated flour is robbed of 40 per cent. of puts 40 per cent. more starch into his flour than he ought to. The man who eats bread made from this adulterated flour is robbed of 40 per cent. of the life-giving powers of the bread, for the incoming starch drives out the gluten. Very many Americans use bread as the staple of their diet. Prof. Snyder has demonstrated, by experiments upon men in feeding them for days at a time certain lines of food, to arrive at what is a reasonable ration for a man at work, that a man must have, where he has but little meat and not many vegetables, at least two pounds of bread per day. This must be honest bread, made from the very best of flour, containing not less than 12 per cent. of gluten.

In case any per cent, of this gluten is driven out, to that extent the man's dietary is impaired. Suppose you were living on largely a bread diet, as so many American laborers are, they and their families. If suddenly, and without any knowledge of the fact—for the adulterated flour cannot be told by its appearance from the pure—your bread became from 15 to 40 per cent, or even in some cases 50 per cent, impoverished, how long before your strength and the strength of your family would show the effects? And whether you are a laboring man or not a very large part of your food is made up from bread or other articles of diet in which flour is used, and to the extent that this flour is adulterated with this corn-starch, to that extent you are robbed.

terated with this corn-starch, to that extent you are robbed.

There is no theory here, it is plain fact; any one who wants to test it can go from a diet of two pounds of rich, nutritious bread, made from honest flour, per diem, with the few vegetables and the infrequent meat of a good many laboring men, to a diet on adulterated bread containing one-third as much strength-giving power, and test it to their own satisfaction. If you try it long enough you will not need a diagram or a diagnosis to show you what is the matter with you.

Some months ago, when the price of wheat was in the dollar region, complaints about adulterated flour were made from various parts of the western and south-western portions of the country. So persistent and frequent were these complaints that Congressional action at last was invoked. Prof. Snyder, at the head of the department of chemistry in the University of Minnesota, has been called upon to test many samples of these adulterated flours. Here are three analyses, one showing what a typical honest wheat flour is composed of, one showing what an adulterated flour is composed of, one showing what an adulterated flour is composed of and one showing the constituent parts of rice flour. It need only be said in this connection that the sample of rice flour, largely the food of the Chinese laborer, is practically the same as to its food value as the sample of adulterated flour, which is only one of many which Prof. Snyder has recently been testing.

The analyses are as follows:

Adulterated
Pure flour. flour. R
Per cent. Per cent. Per 12.2 .4 12:6

Gluten or protein

In this latter instance it will be seen that he who should eat bread from this flour would get 4.23 per cent. of gluten, or protein, or life-giving power, as you wish to call it, one-third as much food value and one-fifth more starch than nature intended he should have.

The adulteration of one of the most The adulteration of one of the most important elements in the food of the nation is not lightly to be ignored; its detriment to the race, physical and in large measure mental, will be in direct proportion to its extent. You may produce a cadaverous Chinese laborer on this adulterated bread, but it will never make an American of the type of which America is proud. type of which America is proud. W. S. HARWOOD.

Thankfulness in His Heart for Poor

Thankfulness in His Heart for Poor Spanish Marksmanship.

[Indianapolis Journal:] Congressman Charles B. Landis tells a new story of why Capt. Philip called his crew on deck after the battle of Santiago and offered thanks for their safety.

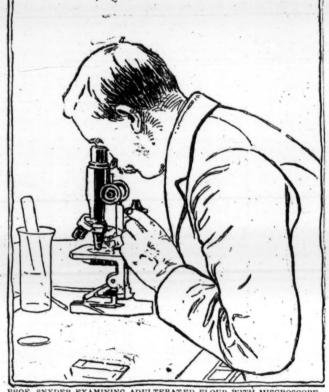

Mr. Landis said he had registered at the hotel at Old Point Comfort, and saw a battleship at anchor. He asked the clerk what the ship was, and was told it was the Texas. Mr. Landis was a great admirer of Capt. Philip, and particularly admired his calling his crew together after the fight at Santiago and offering thinks to the Almighty. He asked if Capt. Philip was in command, and the clerk pointed out that officer, at that time sitting reading a paper. Mr. Landis introduced himself and had a long talk with him, and they fought the battle of Santiago over from beginning to the end. All the time Mr. Landis was consumed with curiosity to know whether or not the story of offering thanks was true, but he hesitated to ask about it. He finally plucked up courage and asked the captain.

he hesitated to ask about it. He finally plucked up courage and asked the captain.

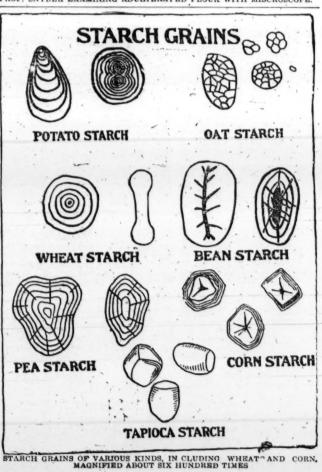

Capt. Philip was visibly embarrassed, he said, and hesitated before answering, and then he said:

"Well, Mr. Landis, it was this way:

I—that is—it was—well, if you drop your hat on the street and some one picks it up for you, you say, "Thank you," or if you fall down on the street and some one helps you up, you always say, "Thanks." There was that boat, with a storm of iron and shot going on one side and then on the other. Then they would fall in the water all around us, and then there would be a perfect cloud of them pass over our heads, and yet we were not struck. When the fight was over, and I had made a hasty inventory and found that we were not hurt, it seemed to me no more than fair that we should say "Thank you's o I had the crew called on deck and told them so. Every man took off his cap, and you could have heard a pindrop on that deck, and, after it was over and I walked past that crew, I saw tears on the faces of many an old sailor that I supposed did not know how to cry."

PROF. SNYDER EXAMINING ADULTERATED FLOUR WITH MISCROSCOPE.

Consider Connection Consider Consider TROPICAL HOMES.

UNCLE SAM WILL SOON BE READY TO GIVE THEM AWAY.

From a Special Correspondent.

ASHINGTON, June 19.—Before long Uncle Sam will be in a position to make you the handsome present of a tropical home in one of his new islands. Counting over the spoils of war and annexation, he finds that 55,000,000 acres, distributed in various islands, have been added to his public domain. If all of this land were adjacent it would form a vast tract equal to Utah in area, Tract equal to Utah in area.

And what is to be done with all of this wealth of trepical land to which there is no private title? The bulk of it is to be settled by loyal citizens and subjects of the United States through a homestead scheme which must be especially devised in the near future. But Uncle Sam will first set aside some of this vast area for his own purposes. He will need fortifications, arsenals, military posts, barracks and navy yards, but most of these will be located where old Spanish and Hawaiian military stations have stood. Uncle Sam will also need sites for public buildings. He will probably need tracts to be used as reservations for the native Filipino tribes, such of them as are uncivilized. But there will still remain in the new islands sufficient public land for all loyal Americans willing to work for it under the homestead scheme shortly to be devised.

A brand new homestead law will have to be enacted for the new colonies, because the standing laws are not applicable. They had to be extended to Alaska by special act and many alterations in the old continental laws were made for the Arctic territory.

Where the New Public Lands are Located.

Where the New Public Lands are Located.

By far the greater portion of this new addition to the public domain lies in the Philippines. The War Department estimates the entire area of the group to be equal to that of the great territory of Arizona. Much more than a half of this is either uninhabited or occupied only by wild tribes of wandering savages, whose abodes are no more permanent nor fixed than are those of the beasts of the jungles thereabouts.

In Porto Rico there are additional public lands from which Spain derived revenue, but the Insular Bureau—the embryo of the new Colonial Department—has not yet determined their exact extent. Spain made few if any accurate surveys, either geodetic or geologic. Even upon the peninsula her only reliable surveys directly surround Madrid.

any accurate surveys, either geodetic or geologic. Even upon the peninsula her only reliable surveys directly surround Madrid.

It is found that in Hawaii we fall heir to 1,772,640 acres of public lands, including the crown lands of Liliuokalani's régime. These Hawaiian government lands are alons greater than the entire State of Delawarc. It is estimated that about seventy thousand acres are suitable for coffee growing, said to be the coming industry of the islands. Sugar cane is grown upon 25,000 acres, while 1000 acres more are rice lands. Four hundred and fifty-one thousand acres are used for grazing, while 681,000 acres contain rich forests. When we came into possession of Hawaii the local government was receiving an income aggregating $100,000 a year from such of these lands as were leased to private parties. Of the additional Hawaiian government lands now added to our public domain, 145 acres are in building lots in Honolulu and Hilo. About two-thirds of the public areas lie in the island of Hawaii, The remaining third is scattered over the many remaining islands. public areas lie in the island of Hawaii. The remaining third is scattered over the many remaining islands. As in the case of the other new possessions, our existing land laws do not apply to any of this and new ones must be shortly framed. Congress will have to act before the tracts can be opened to settlement. Meanwhile the islands can profit by the $100,000 a year received in rentals. This, as well as all future money received in any way from the tracts, will be used solely for the education or public uses of people living in Hawaii, except when needed for building army and navy stations and public buildings.

Probable Features of the New Levy

Probable Features of the New Law.

The new homestead laws for the colonies will without doubt provide that anyone, whether of American or foreign birth, can earn for himself a home if a citizen of the United States, or even if having applied for naturalization. It will probably be required that he be of age, unless a married man, a soldier, a sailor or a marine. To encourage colonization, the usual period of five years during which the land must be cultivated and improved before the receipt of the title may be reduced to four or even to three years. It is also probable that unusual inducements will be offered to the brave boys participating in the Spanish-American war and the present brush with the hostile Filipinos. Without doubt their periods of service will be deducted from the term of years decided upon as necessary for the improvement of the homestead. Those discharged on account of wounds or disabilities will probably have their entire terms of enlistment subtracted, whether they have nearly filled them or not. Similar discriminations were made in favor of soldiers and sailors in the civil war when public lands were opened subsequent to that struggle. Those who will have influence in the framing of the new bill will make due provision that applicants must occupy and improve the lands themselves, and that no one man can obtain two reservations. American negroes will be encouraged to take homesteads in localities where natives will be learning our improved methods of agriculture. All of the details of the scheme of course will rest with Congress. That bedy will have to determine how large a slice of the land can be given to one man. When the homestead laws were extended to Alaska eighty acres were fixed as the maximum to be claimed by one individual, although in the Vestern States and Territories. the land can be given to one man. When the home-stead laws were extended to Alaska eighty acres were wimum to be claimed by one individual, by Western States and Territories the maximum ordinarily is 160 acres, or just twice much.

What is to Become of the Natives!

While this process is going on in the Philippines enlightened men, of course will be claiming the territory previously occupied by the savage natives. But what is to become of these wild people? The outcome of the scheme therefore must be the establishment of a Filining bureau convergable. what is to become of these with people: The ment of a fit of the scheme therefore must be the establishment of a Filipino bureau corresponding to our Indian Bureau. The less enlightened natives will have to be concentrated in agencies and educated. This task will be one of good size. Our agents will have to cope with 500 different languages and dialects spoken in the islands today by as many different people. It is not likely that any of the Malays will go upon reservations after they are conquered. They are a race superior to any other Asiatic people and can do good work if they wish to. Many of the other dusky natives have been converted and partly educated by the Spanish missionary priests. Mindanao, whose area is as great as that of Indiana, will contribute more to this vast colonial public domain than any other single island annexed. The interior is unexplored and occupied throughout by wandering savages never yet subdued. Luzon, although still larger, equaling Ohio in area, yet contains an abundance of land to which there is no private title. This will be of greater value than any of the public agricultural lands. The interior of Samar, whose area is equal to that of Connecticut, is occupied by savages who have sought refuge in the forests and mountains. Mindoro, as large as Delaware and Rhode Island together, is possibly the least populous island of the group, although within an easy day's sail from Manila. As in the other cases, the interior is unsurveyed and left to a low tribe called "Manguianos," indigenous of the island, and a number of black dwarfs, all of whom live in a miserable manner. It would be but charity to put such people on a reservation. Like conditions hold good in practically all of the lesser islands, numbering as they do from 1200 to 2000, according to latest estimates.

Forests Will Be Preserved.

Forests Will Be Preserved.

Considerable of this new public land will be set aside for forest reserves. Uncle Sam will profit by lessons learned at home and start in from the very beginning to preserve from extinction his valuable forests in the new possessions. Pioneers entering the islands unless checked by law would soon destroy the luxuriant new possessions. Pioneers entering the islands unless checked by law would soon destroy the luxuriant natural growths of ebony, mahogany, palm, bamboo, rattan, cedar, ironwood, sapan, logwood, gum and other precious trees, especially in the Oriental islands. There are hundreds of rare Philippine woods whose names are not even known. Uncle Sam will also protect the supply of gutta percha and cocoanuts in the forests, also a valuable tree known as the Cocos nucifera, whose trunk, branches, leaves, fruit, oil, shell, and husk are valuable to the natives. The valuable forest growths of bamboo must also be preserved.

By some geologists who have been on the field it is believed that the Philippines will become more than a second Klondike. Mineral lands there, as well as on all islands lately acquired, will be opened to exploration and purchase by citizens of the United States, but under laws different from those relating to other public lands. A mineral claim acquired by an individual will be smaller than one which he may obtain in agricultural lands. The Geological Survey must first get in its work. Spain never made a geological survey of one of her island possessions. It will be remembered that she neglected this in California and left its gold to us. Gold lands in Luzon, Mindoro, Masbate, Panay, Leyte, Ticao and smaller islands where the yellow metal has been already observed, will be disposed of at nominal prices, the area depending upon the nature of the claim, whether lode or placer. Upon lodes, or veins containing great quantities of gold, the share of each individual will probably be limited to sections of about 1500x600 feet. So many dollars' worth of improvement will have to be made each year for a certain period and a prescribed rate per acre, perhaps $5, will be charged after these improvements have reached satisfaction. One-half the rates per acre will doubtless be charged for placer mines where gold can be washed upon the surface only unless previously unknown veins are afterward discovered. Most of th are afterward discovered. Most of the gold deposits observed in the Philippines have been in soil occupied by wild tribes never subdued by the Spaniards. Different regulations will be made for the undeveloped copper, iron, coal, zinc and sulphur lands to be added to the public domain from the various islands. The coal will be available for mining in Cebu, Masbate and the Simirara Islands; copper—now in great demand—in the wilds of Panay, and sulphur in unexplored environs of the ancient volcanoes. The Spaniards knew of the existence of much iron in various islands, but reasoned that importation was less bother than building railroads to haul this native product.

Model cities and towns will be built upon portions of these new public lands reserved for centers of population in localities favered by nature for such use. Areas thus set aside will be sold at auction. Groups of colonists desiring to found new towns or cities will file plats and specifications with the colonial authorities. These being made suitable, lots will be sold at something like $10 apiece to encourage concentration. It is officially estimated that the new possessions swell our public domain until it now contains a billion acres.

RICHARD BLAND'S FIRST CLIENT.

[Denver Republican:] Richard P. Bland's first client is now a resident of Denver. He is Lewis James, who lives here with his wife, and who has nearly reached the scriptural limitation of three score years and ten. "Mr. Bland' had just been admitted to the bar, and I was then a young man when I retained him, for $5, to represent me in one of the two law cases in which I have ever figured," said Mr. James, the other day. "I lived on a farm near St. James, Phelps county, and Mr. Bland resided at Rola, the county seat, where he and his brother, C. C. Bland, now a Judge, were commencing their legal careers. I had trouble with a man who contracted to put up a rail fence, and who overdrew his account. The trial came up before a Justice of the Peace, whose office was in the edge of the woods, about ten miles from Rolla. Mr. Bland was to be there at a certain hour, but did not put in an appearance, so the Justice of the Peace heard the evidence in his absence, decided the case in my favor, and adjourned the court. Just about that time Mr. Bland arrived, and we found he had walked the whole ten miles. But he did not walk back. A few years later a brick manufacturer sued me to secue money on brick I claimed were spoiled. Mr. Bland defended me, and won the suit, which was the second of the only two I ever had on my hands."

[Pittsburgh Dispatch's New York Letter:] The "Penitent Magdalen," the picture which Salvador de Mendonca, formerly Brazilian Minister to the United States, sold to Francis L. Loring for $4550, has been returned to the former. Mr. Loring has also gotten back his check. The latter claims it is not a genuine Murillo, and entered suit to recover. He says he has discovered that the same picture once sold for $950. Now that his money has been returned, he will pay $2500 to send it to Spain to have it "experted" if Mr. de Mendonca will agree to pay the expense should it prove that the picture is not genuine. The art world is stirred up over the incident, as the picture fooled all of the connoisseurs.

JOHANN STRAUSS.

From the Musical Courier.

HE death of Johann Strauss, at Vienna, while not unexpected, leaves a gap in the world of music that one may confidently feel will never be filled, for Johann Strauss was unique. Christened early in his career the "Waltz King," he wrote music as imperishable as Mozart's. It was music with true vis comica, and in the case of "Die Fledermaus," it is music that becomes a classic. The music of Strauss occupies a distinct place in the history of the art. Without the cynicism of the Gallicized German, Jacques Offenbach, he had all the genius of that extraordinary apparition. Strauss was an Offenbach who stayed at home and remained sincere to the traditions of his family and art. If Chopin spiritualized the valse, Strauss elevated it to the dignity of an art form. His operas are all delightful, his dances embody the fantastic, fleeting joyousness of the mixed race on the banks of the Danube. His Hebraic blood gave him temperamental intensity, his Viennese environment, the gay, insouciant dash to his music. Added to all these was solid musical training and true instinct for orchestral color, a happy vocal style and high spirits at the champagne point, intoxicating, mundane, but fascinating.

Strauss was the son of the famous Johann Strauss, also a "Waltz King." He was born at Vienna, October There were two other brothers, Josef and 1825. Eduard, both composers and conductors. Eduard is the only survivor. Johann was born while his father was conducting his "Pesther Waltz" at the Coliseum was conducting his "Pesther Waltz" at the Coliseum in Vienna. With the true Strauss spirit the happy parent played "Wiener Freuden."

Of Johann, Henry T. Fink once wrote: "It is not often that a man of genius has a son who attains greater eminence than himself, but in this case the palm must be awarded to Johann Strauss, Jr., whose creative power was not only greater than that of his brothers, but soared into regions of which even his father never ut soared into regions of which even his father never Johann, the younger, was destined for a business Jonann, the younger, was destined for a business career. He was, however, enabled to study music secretly by the aid of his mother. When only 6 years old he composed his first waltz, "First Thought." Carefully instructed in harmony he was, even as a youngster, an excellent violinist.

But until he was 18 the secret was kept from his father. There was a curious vein of artistic jealousy in Johann, the elder. As a father he loved his heir apparent, but as a musician he would tolerate no rival and no successor. When, on October 15, 1844, young Johann threw aside all concealment and boldly accepted the position of conductor at Domayer's, at Hietzing, near Vienna, the storm broke. The old gentleman left his home and refused for a while to have anything further to do with his recalcitrant family.

But the nineteen-year-old conductor sprang into im-his nome and rerused for a white to have anything further to do with his recalcitrant family.

But the nineteen-year-old conductor sprang into immediate success. Vienna admired kis audacity. The young heir apparent had a party as enthusiastic as his royal father. He showed his appreciation of the latter by conducting his famous "Lorelei" waitzes, and followed these by a number of his own compositions.

Johann, the elder, died in 1849. Then Johann, the younger, joined together his father's orchestra and his own and made a successful tour in Austria, Poland and Germany. For ten years he undertook the direction of the summer concerts in the Petropaulowski Park at St. Petersburg. Meanwhile, in 1853, he had been the first to introduce fragments of "Lohengrin" in Vienna, and later on he first played portions of the "Meistersinger" in the same tity. While thus showing appreciation—and foresight, he did not neglect his own been the first to introduce fragments of "Lohengrin" in Vienna, and later on he first played portions of the "Meistersinger" in the same vity. While thus showing appreciation and foresight, he did not neglect his own original talents. He wrote in all some five hundred waltzes, of which "The Beautiful Blue Danube," the "Thousand and One Nights," the "Roses from the South" and "Wine. Woman and Song" were among the most successful. He also produced a number of light operettes. The best known are "Indigo" and "The Forty Thieves" (1871,) "The Carnival in Rome" (1873,) "Die Fledermaus" (1874,) "Cagliostro," "Prince Methusalah," "The Merry War" and "The Queen's Lace Handkerchief." His single effort in the line of regular opera, "Ritter Pazmann," achieved only a success d'estime, when produced at the Imperial Operahouse in Vienna, in 1893.

From 1863 to 1870 Johann had held the much-coveted position of court-ball musical director to the Emperor of Austria. This he resigned in the latter year to his brother, Eduard, in order to devote himself to composition. He had also made public appearances in London and in Paris. During the great Gilmore Jubilee he came to the United States, but without his orchestra, which was first heard in this country in 1893, under the direction of his brother Eduard.

Brahms and Wagner both recognized his genius. "One of Strauss's waltzes." said the latter, "as far chestra, which was first heard in this country in 1893, under the direction of his brother Eduard.

Brahms and Wagner both recognized his genius. "One of Strauss's waltzes," said the latter, "as far surpasses in charm, finish and read-musical worth hundreds of the artificial compositions of his contemporaries as the steeple of St. Stephen's surpasses the advertising columns on the Paris boulevards."

His golden jubilee was celebrated at Vienna October 15, 1894, fifty years after he first took up a baton at Domayer's Casino at Hietzing. A new operetta by Strauss himself, entitled "The Apple Feast," was produced for the first time in the Vienna Theater, and during the week which marked the duration of the festival every theater and operahouse in Vienna performed some one of his operettas. The occasion wound up with a grand banquet, congratulations and presentations of addresses and floral tributes.

Strauss was thrice married, but he leaves no children of his own. A step-daughter, whom he adopted, survives him. He is the last of the great musical fun makers. Our composers are too pessimistic today to attempt the production of music overflowing with high spirits and genuine humor. Long after many highly-respected symphonies and operas are dead, "Die Fledermaus" will be heard and enjoyed. 'Strauss's art is universal.

Hard Place to Collect In,

PITTSBURGH minister of the gospel tells this story on himself: He has a reputation as a "collector." He is always ready to raise money for any purpose within the scope of the work of the church. He allows few Sundays to pass without reminding his people in one way or another of their duty to give people in one way or another of their duty to give freely within their means to church and charity. He preached a sermon on "Plato's Hell." He described it as a place where those condemned to it would suffer the torment of having their ruling passions on earth uppermost at all times without the means of gratify-ing them. At the conclusion of the sermon he called the attention of the congregation to a collection that would be taken up for a worthy object. After the serv-ices he met an old parishioner, a gardener, who spoke bluntly.

He was serving as president of the Board of Inspection, and had nearly ten years of shore service just behind him.

War with Spain was threatened, but not immediately probable. Commodore Dewey applied for command of the Asiatic squadron. Secretary Long had listened to the friends of Commodore Watson, a Kentucky man with New England associations, and was about to appoint him to the command of the Asiatic squadron over the head of Dewey, who was five numbers ahead of Watson, who was then governor of the Naval Home at Philadelphia. Dewey was expecting to be laid on the shelf, but his friends went to Senator Proctor of Vermont. The Senator made a hurried trip to the White House and laid the matter before the President, representing that the Secretary proposed to put a junior over Dewey's head, and thus rob him of a squadron command before his retirement. The President looked into the matter, and then wrote a letter which read substantially:

"'Mr. Speaker,' said the latter, breaking into Cannon's speech, 'the gentleman has broken his contract, and I refuse to yield him the floor any longer,' and then Cox went on in his best vein and gave Cannon a pretty lively flaying. HE story telegraphed from Havana about the conspiracy to overthrow the American authority in Luba reminds me that a similar scare was once attempted in Porto Rico. One morning a man from one of the interior towns came to headquarters, and in a most imperious manner announced that it was ima most imperious manner announced that it was imperative that he should see Gen. Henry alone. He was shown into the general's office without ceremony, and asked to state his business. With a great many preliminaries and mysterious airs he whispered that a conspiracy was on foot to assassinate all of the American officials, overpower the soldiers and seize the government. He admitted that he had reluctantly joined the plot, but was remorseful and was willing to reveal the details and give the names of the men engaged, provided he was well rewarded and assured of protection.

Gen. Henry had been looking him over and "sizing him up" during the interview, and when the visitor finished his narration, remarked indifferently:
"Is that all?"
"Yes," replied the stranger.

"Is that all?"

"Yes," replied the stranger.

"Well," said Gen. Henry, "you go home and advise your friends to commence digging graves at once. FRESH LITERATURE.

MATTERS OF INTEREST IN THE WORLD OF LETTERS.

"Idylls of the Sea."

RANK T. BULLEN'S "Cru'se of the Cachalot," which was published a few months ago, brought him instant success. Everywhere it has been recognized as a remarkable book and it has already reached a place among the best-selling books of the year. And now comes the author with intent to follow up that success as quickly as possible and puts forth another deep-sea book bearing the title, "Idylls of the Sea." It is made up of some thirty sketches, all dealing with life either above or below the ocean waves. Some of them tell of incidents in the lives of the men on board the ocean-sailing vessels and some are concerned with the cean-sailing vessels and some are concerned with the lives and habits and natures of the sharks and whales and devil fish and other denizens of the deep, and still others are sketches of happenings at sea, some of them true, so the author alleges, and others evident products of the imagination. In the embodiment and presentation in words of the power and wonder and mystery of the sea this book does not quite equal Mr. Bullen's former effort. Some of the sketches show self-consciousness, no trace of which marred the "Cruise of the Cachalot," and occasionally one is compelled to suspect him of trying to do "fine writing." But these defects are to be found in only a few of the articles, and most of them are marked by the simplicity of narration, the sympathy with deep-sea life, the keen observation, the sensibility of feeling, that made the "Cruise of the Cachalot" as delightful a book of the ocean as has ever been published. The book has that vividness which comes only of thorough understanding of and sympathy with the subject. It is like a long row of brilliant word pictures of life at sea, in which the theme is now on top of the waters and now below their surface, and now on the deek of a sailing vessel, and again up in the crow's nest, or in the whaling boats. Mr. Bullen is keenly sensitive to the poetic significance of the changing moods of the sea and the bits of description which he gives here and there of the face of the waters, glow with color and are vivid in imagery. Evidently, he has himself felt the glamour, the splendor, and the exaltation of the sea and is able to shadow them forth for his readers. He knows pretty thoroughly also the habits and natures of the inhabitants of the cean and is able to set right many a mistaken notion of the natural history people who have not had his opportunities for long and careful study of the creatures themselves. Whatever he says of whales and sea-elephants and pilot fish and all the other queer beings off upon his readers in this way, before they have done mu the lives and habits and natures of the sharks and whales and devil fish and other denizens of the deep,

History of the American Nation.

The Appletons have began the publication of a series of books of weighty import which they call "the Twentieth Century Series," and have just issued the first volume in the list, "A History of the American Nation," by Andrew C. McLaughlin, who occupies the chair of American history in the University of Michigan. It is intended to meet the needs of high schools as a text book in the history of the United States, but it also gives for the general reader in convenient compass an excellent skeleton of the history of the American republic from the voyage of Columbus, which added an empire to Spain's possessions, down to the war of last summer, which took from her the last remnants of that imperial domain. At the close of each chapter there is a goodly list of authorities upon the events of which the chapter treats, so that the reader will know just where to look to fill in the outlines of the chapter. The purpose of the book is to trace the main outlines of national development and show how the American people came to be what they are. There is a clear account of the struggle of the nations of Western Europe for possession in the New World, followed by an outline of the formation and growth of the English colonies, the development and growth of political ideas, the difficulties and disorders of the Confederate period, the adoption of the Constitution, the effort to maintain national independence and the struggles and events that finally brought all the sections of the nation into a bond of stronger union. The author has treated the subject with the intention of bringing youthful readers to a realization of their political surroundings and of the duties of citizenship which will devolve upon them. For this reason he has paid particular attention to the rise of political parties, to the issues involved in elections, and to questions of government and administration. His treatment of the wars in which the United States has been involved is especially to be commended. He has not overburd make it for even a dull student a live book, every part of which is in touch with his own times. Prof. Mc-Laughlin does make the very great mistake, however, of not indicating, when it has occasionally happened, the opposition of popular feeling to governmental policy. For instance, when he touches upon President Cleveland's attempt to reinstate Queen Liliuokalani, he says nothing of the fact that Cleveland and his commissioner were nearly alone, in the whole nation, in their desire to crush the young republic. It would have been the part of justice to give some idea of the universal indignation which the President's action excited. A large number of maps and illustrations add value to the work.

F. Anstey's New Novel.

F. Anstey's "Love Among the Lions" will arouse a pleasurable anticipation among all those many thousands who have read his "Tinted Venus" and "Vice Versa," but it is an anticipation, alas, that the reading of the book will not fulfill. The author still shows something of that ingenuity of invention and that fertility in quaint conceit which made his earlier books such mines of entertainment. But the bubbling humor is conspicuously absent and of those delightfully absurd contrasts and those quaint surprises in his way of putting things, "Love Among the Lions" shows almost none. It is concerned with the stormy and exciting love affair of a modest and peace-loving tea-taster and planes, the Spanish stepdaughter of a flabby and pompous teacher of elocution. The young woman yearned to be the temporary center of interest for the newspaper-reading public, to have her name in all the newspapers and on everybody's tongue, if only for one short day, and she announced to the amazed and horrified tea-taster that they must be married in a den of performing lions, or she would not marry him at all. The shy and retiring tea-taster consented, in the secret hope that the thing could somehow be made impossible. And after the excitement was all over and he and his affianced had been decorously wedded in the parish church he wrote this account of what really happened on that memorable night in the lions' cage in order to set himself and his wife right before the public. It is an ingenious sort of narrative and diverting in a way, but is not nearly the equal of his "earlier stories. Mr. Anstey is a master of the art of building a story out of airy nothings. The slightest product of his pen is always sure to be perfectly constructed, with quaint imaginings and unexpected turns of plot deftly joined together to make an amusing whole that is at once outrageously impossible and yet has every seeming of probability. It is not the least charm of Mr. Anstey's work that he is the master of a very pleasing style. His sentences follow one another with easy grace and his English has that satisfying, unconscious correctness which comes of knowing his mother tongue so well that he does not have to try to restrain himself from maltreating it. And that is something which can be said of few enough of the novel writers of the day, more's the pity!

"The Awakening."

It is rather difficult to decide whether Mrs. Kate Chopin, the author of "The Awakening," tried in that novel merely to make an intimate, analytical study of the character of a selfish, capricious woman, or whether she wanted to preach the doctrine of the right of the individual to have what he wants, no matter whether or not it may be good for him. It is true that the woman in the book who wanted her own way comes to an untimely end in the effort to get what she wants, or rather, in the effort to gratify every whim that moves her capricious soul, but there are sentences here and there through the book that indicate the author's desire to hint her belief that her heroine had the right of the matter and that if the woman had only been able to make other people "understand" things as she did she would not have had to drown herself in the blue waters of the Mexican Gulf. The scene of the story is laid in New Orleans and in a summer resort on the coast of the Gulf, and the book is concerned mainly with the mental and moral development of Edna, wife of Leonce Pontellier, a Kentucky woman married to a creole, after she discovers that she has fallen in love with Robert Lebrun, another creole. And as the biography of one individual out of that large section of femininity which may be classified as "fool women," the book is a strong and graceful plece of work. It is like one of Aubrey Beardsley's hideous but haunting pictures with their disfiguring leer of sensuality, but yet carrying a distinguishing, strength and grace and individuality. The book shows a searching insight into the motives of the "fool woman" order of being, the woman who learns nothing by experience and has not a large enough circle of vision to see beyond her own immediate desires. In many ways, it is unhealthily introspective and morbid in feeling, as the story of that sort of woman must inevitably be. The evident powers of the author are employed on a subject that is unworthy of them, and when she writes another book it is to be hoped that she will choose a theme more healthful and sweeter of smell.

A story of College Life.

Stanley Waterloo has written in "The Launching of a Man" a readable, but not too intensely interesting story of the life of a young man at college after his first year and of his battle with the world after he graduates, and of the love affairs which engross his sentiments during most of that time. It is a very splendid young animal whom he has chosen for his hero and the young fellow quite merits the success, both in love and life, which the author has allotted to him for his portion. It is an easy reading book, for Mr. Waterloo skips along over the surface of things and does not call upon the reader for any measurable effort of either thought or feeling. There are accounts of college pranks and college wars between freehmen and sophomores and of triumphs in examination, not always by fair means, and finally a long story of the hero's stern initiation into the practical things of life on a surveying expedition in the advance forces of the Santa Fé Railroad's transcontinental line. This portion does not read as if the author knew his subject intimately enough to warrant his writing about it. Or, at any rate, he has not made it seem as real as he has that portion of the book which tells of life at the University of Michigan, or of the pine woods of the Wolverine State. The book is not so clever or so strong as his collection of short stories recently reviewed in these columns, called "The Wolf's Long Howl." For his lack of ability to get below the surface, to deal with the roots of things, to penetrate below the obvious and the pleasing, does not make itself so manifest in the short story as it is bound to do in a longer and more ambitious effort.

"Story of the British Race."

The latest number of Appletons' Library of Useful Stories series is written by John Munro, who wrote also "The Story of Electricity," and is concerned with Stories series is written by John Munro, who wrote also "The Story of Electricity," and is concerned with the British race. It is not so successful as have been most of the numbers in this series of condensed information, for the reason that the author has been so intent upon telling what certain things are not that he has not succeeded in making the reader clearly understand just what they are. He was hampered, of course, by the necessity of covering a great deal of ground in small space, but in his effort to give an idea of the importance of recent ethnological investigations he has wasted much space, and something of the reader's patience by dilating upon the theories which those investigations have proved to be wrong. Nevertheless, he has condensed into the little volume much valuable and interesting information, so that the general reader will find here within handy compass what was before available only in scattered volumes. Mr. Munro has made his little study all the more important by availing himself of the light which has been thrown on the science of ethnology by the modern studies and investigations in anthropology. These have very recently overturned many of the beliefs formerly held upon the descents and relationships of races and the reader will find in this little volume the latest results of those studies as they affect the British race. The book traces the origin of the different elements which compose the British race, its development after the fusing of these elements into one whole, and devotes several chapters to the English, Scotch, Welsh and Irlsh types, and in the final chapters makes havec of many a fondly held belief concerning the place of the Celt. One of his conclusions is "that the first chapters of British history will require to be written again by the light of anthropology, and that our habitual views regarding ourselves must undergo a change."

This is a collection of short stories by Mrs. L. B. Walford, the book taking the title of the first story. They are sketches of English life and are for the most part clumsily constructed and poorly told. They are not equal to the poorest of that crop of short stories which is turned out by the wholesale in this country every month by the magazines and literary weeklies. Why any American publisher, in these days of international copyright, should care to republish a book so weak, puerile and uninteresting, is one of those mysteries in the publishing business which the ordinarily sensible layman can never, never understand.

Mark Twain's New Scheme.

The Vienna correspondent of the London Times has sent to that paper an account of a piece of literary work which Samuel Langhorne Clemens declares that he intends to do. The correspondent, who had his information from Mr. Clemens himself before that gentleman left Vienna a few weeks ago, writes as follows:

"Mr. Clemens has kindly given me permission to telegraph to the Times some particulars of a pet scheme of his to which he has already devoted a great deal of his time and which will occupy a great part of the remainder of his life. In some respects it will be unparalleled in the history of literature. It is a bequest to posterity, in which none of those now living and comparatively few of their grandchildren, even will have any part or share. This is a work which is only to be published 100 years after his death, as a portrait gallery of centemporaries with whom he has come into personal contact. These are drawn solely for his own pleasure in the work, and with the single object of telling the truth, without malice, and to serve no grudge, but, at the same time, without respect of persons or social conventions, institutions or pruderies of any kind. These portraits of men and women, painted with all their warts, as well as with every attractive feature which has caught his eye, will not be written in the style of Mark Twain's books, which their author anticipates will be forgotten by the time his gallery is published. Any humor they may contain will be entirely measured to make the superaction of th ipates will be forgotten by the time his gallery is published. Any humor they may contain will be entirely unsought. It must be inherent in the subject if it is to appear in the portrait.

"In Mr. Clemens's opinion, a work of the kind he proposes is only possible under the conditions he has laid down for himself. To use his own words:

"A bock that is not to be published for a century gives the writer a freedom which he could secure in no other way. In these conditions you can draw a man without prejudice exactly as you knew him and yet gives the writer a freedom which he could secure in no other way. In these conditions you can draw a man without prejudice exactly as you knew him and yet have no fear of hurting his feelings or those of his sons or grandsons. A book published 100 years hence, containing intimate portraits, honestly and truthfully drawn, of monarchs and politicians, bootblacks and shoemakers—in short, of all those varieties of humanity with which one comes in contact in the course of an active life of fifty years—cannot help being then valuable as a picture of the past. I have written a great deal of this book since I came to Vienna. During the rest of my life I mean to write in fresh portraits whenever they come vividiy before my mind, whether they be of the present day or old acquaintances. To make such a bock interesting for immediate publication it would be necessary for me to confine myself to the men of note. As it is, I choose them from my whole circle of acquaintances, and the undistinguished have about as good a chance of getting in as the distinguished. The sole paesport to a place in my gallery is that the man or woman shall have keenly excited my interest. In 100 years they will all be interesting if well and faithfully described. We have lost a great deal in the past through a lack of books written in this way for a remote posterity. A man cannot tell the whole trutabut himself, even if convinced that what he wrote remote posterity. A man cannot tell the whole truth about himself, even if convinced that what he wrote would never be seen by others. I have personally satisfied myself of that and have got others to test it also. You cannot lay hare your private soul and look at it. You are too much ashamed of yourself. It is too disgusting. For that reason I confine myself to drawing the portraits of others."

It does not seem to have occurred to Mark Twain that he would have to hide the manuscript of such a book as well as Capt. Kidd secreted his treasure, if he wanted to be sure of keeping it from the public a hundred years. Mr. Clemens and his family will spend several months in London and will return to this country in

Mosers. Dodd. Mead & Co. will soon publish the only authorized edition of Henry Seton Merriman's early novels. It will include "The Phantom Future," "Young Mistley," "Prisoners and Captives," and "Suspense," all revised, condensed, and in part rewritten by Mr. Merriman, who feels much aggrieved by their unauthorized publication in this country. They were written years ago and Mr. Merriman felt them to be so far below his later work that he wished to suppress them entirely, and had done so in England, at considerable financial loss to himself. But as they were published before the international copyright law went into effect, unscrupulous American publishers recently took what every right-minded person must feel to have been a dishonorable advantage of the author and issued them here. Mr. Merriman's next book, to be called "The Isle of Unrest," will be published next year. It is the only novel he has written since the appearance of "Roden's Corner."

"The Hooligan Nights," by Clarence Rook, a London journalist, is soon to be published in this country by Messrs. Henry Holt & Co. Hooligan gives, through his blographer, considerable information regarding his many criminal pursuits, tinging, it all with his light-hearted humor, for Mr. Rook generally reports him verbatim.

Next Month's Magazines.

The July Century will contain two articles on Sir Walter Scott. In one of them a descendant of one of Scott's most intimate friends will tell the pathetic story of the romance of Sir Walter's early life. An incident not mentioned by the writer, but of special interest to Americans, is the fact that a grandson of the girl whose failure to love him clouded the romancer's career, enlisted in the United States army, and fell fighting under Custer on the day that saw the young general and his command annihilated by the Indians. Sir William Forbes was Scott's lifelong friend, as well as his fortunate rival; and John Stuart Forbes was the name of the grandson who died in the American service at the age of 27.

As a result of the meeting that was held on the field of Naseby on the tercentenary of Cromwell's birthday, a scheme was started for a memorial library of England's great civil war. Although it is intended primarily to commemorate Oliver Cromwell, it is to be representative of all aspects of the strife from whatever point it may be viewed. The idea has met with a very enthusiastic response, and the village of Naseby is likely to become, by this means, another point of interest for the tourist.

Mr. Abraham declared that he found among Lord Ashburton's papers a corrected proof of one of the "Junius" letters, and that the corrections were in Lord Ashburton's handwriting, with which he was perfectly familiar.

BIG CHANCES FOR AMERICANS AND AMERICAN TRADE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARA (Brazil,) May 15, 1899.—In closing my letters gations of the trade conditions and of the chances for American capital. During the past few months I have visited the chief cities of this republic. I have traveled in the neighborhood of 8000 miles, and have seen the principal industrial centers of the empire.

I believe that Brazil is in the infancy of its development. It will support a hundred people some day where it now supports one. It will be one of the richest countries of the globe, and it will pay Uncle Sam to cultivate it, and to insist that he gets his rights in it as one of the great traders of the world. Brazil has a territory almost as large as the United States, and one which includes more cultivable land. It contains more than half the people who live in South America. Its population is increasing, and it is steadily growing as population is increasing, and it is steadily growing as a goods-consumer.

At present its exports amount to $25,000,000 more than its imports, and still its imports figure up the tidy sum of $100,000,000 a year.

We take about half of all that Brazil sells. We buy the most of her coffee and tens of millions of dollars' worth of her rubber. We get but little in exchange. Our exports to Brazil are only about one-fifth our imports, and we pay her a balance of about $48,000,000 a Year.

If we should stop buying, the officials of some of the best States would go hungry. Para would have a famine, and Sao Paulo would have to patch its pantaloons. The officials of these provinces rely upon their revenues from the export business. These are enormous, amounting to 25 cents a pound at the present rates on rubber, and 11 per cent. on coffee. The duties are, of course, paid by the consumers, so that every American who rides a rubber-tired bicycle has had to pay 25 per cent. into the treasuries of Para and Manaos, and every one who drinks a cup of coffee adds thereby to the support of the government of the coffee-growing States of Brazil. and Sao Paulo would have to patch its pantaloons. Petty Taxes on American Trade.

You would think that Brazil ought to be grateful to us for this enormous trade. She may be so, but she has a queer way of showing it. She charges us a tariff on everything we sell to her, taxing us on some articles as much as 100 per cent. At times she makes what are called reciprocity treatles. Some of our goods go in nominally free, but indirectly every ship carrying American goods which comes to Brazil has to pay toll. In most of the harbors there is what is called expeditations and the provinces rely upon their revenues, and unterform the export business. At present the gas company has, I believe, an exclusive franchise, but this could easily be set aside or compromised.

Petropolis, which is in the mountains back of Rio, and which is a favorite summer resort of the Brazillans, an electric plant, the power of which is generated by a mountain stream. This plant not only lights the city, but many of the houses, and, among others, that of Minister Bryan.

At present nearly all the railroads of Rio de Janeiro are moved by horse or mule power. The electrical franchises would be worth a great deal. The city is surrounded by suburbs, and the Brazilians would patronize the electric railroads well. They are a lazy people. Sao Paulo (200,000) still has horse cars. Para is arguelled reciprocity treaties. Some of our goods go in nominally free, but indirectly every ship carrying the set aside or compromised.

Such taxes are levied not by law, but according to the ideas and tastes of the local officials. They are really a sort of blackmail, and the probability is that most of the money goes into the pockets of the men who levy the taxes. "In fact," said a leading railroad official to me the other day, "every one down here seems to be lying awake at night to think how he can squeeze a few milrels out of the foreigner without working for them."

Every man who comes down here to go into business must expect to pay a tax for the privilege. There is not a merchant or mechanic in Rio who does not pay a tax. The bootblack pays for the right to black your shoes. Every store pays for the privilege of opening its doors, and every contract, note and check must bear its estem.

It seems to me that the United States has been discriminated against as to government contracts. At least this has been the case in the past. Brazilian coal until now has all come from England, and it was only last year that American firms were allowed to compete for government supplies. Then Minister Bryan and Consul-General Seegar secured the right to competitive business, and 120,000 tons of coal were put up for decision in this way. Our coal companies should study this market. Brazil uses $3,000,000 worth of English coal annually. coal annually.

Chances for Our Electrical Companies.

The Brazilians are rapidly adopting electricity. There are towns of 10,000 and 15,000 inhabitants in Southern Brazil which have electric lights. The city of Sao Paulo, which has 200,000 population, is well equipped in this respect. There is a good electric-light system here in Para, although the poles are placed in the center of the sidewalk. I find that the Brush are lights are used in Manaos, a thousand miles up the Amazon. Rio is still lighted by gas. It is a city of 700,000 people, and a good electric-light plant could make a fortune for its owners. At present the gas company has, I believe, an exclusive franchise, but this could easily be set aside or compromised.

cars, although the Germans are scheming to get hold of the electric-railway franchises.

I am told that there is a big German syndicate which has agents going about through Brazil and picking up everything good in the way of electricity. They have already gotten their hands to a certain extent on Rio, having built there the Villa Isabella tramway, with the idea of equipping it electrically.

They have secured in Sao Paulo, and are negotiating for roads in Pernambuco. Pernambuco has about two hundred thousand people. It is flat, and car lines could be operated without much power. The street-car rates are lower, however, than they are with us. The fares are from 1½ to 3 cents a trip. At the same time, labor is very cheap, and most of the lines are operated at a profit.

There are telephone companies all over Brazil. You will not find a town of any size which has not one. The most of them pay dividends.

Investments in Steam Railroads.

Brazil is growing very fast as to railroad lines. Its railways now have a length of about nine thousand miles, and there is an equal amount under survey or in course of construction. The English own some of the best of these properties, and they are scheming to get hold of others

At present the government has about three thousand miles of lines, but these are poorly administered and do not pay. I doubt if any business managed by South American officials can ever pay. Every official expects to make a squeeze or a percentage out of all the money which comes into his hands. The result is that the government roads are badly managed and poorly administered. ministered.

ministered. The losses have been so great that a law has been recently passed authorizing the leasing of the government railroads, and it is probable that they will eventually go into the hands of English capitalists. The most of the railways have been constructed under a guarantee from the government of 6 per cent. or 7 per cent. on the capital invested, and many of them are now worked on that basis.

One of the most profitable roads in the world is that which runs up the mountains from Santos to Jundiahy.

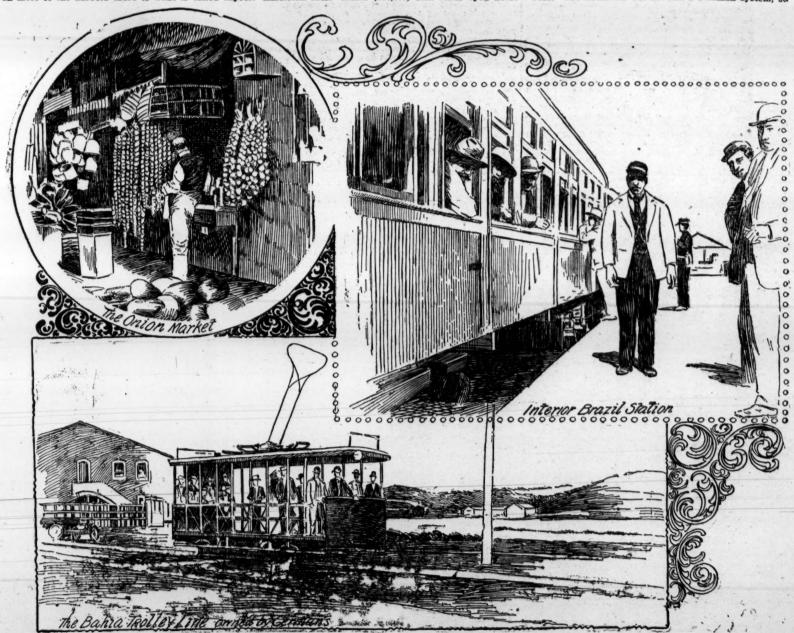

One of the most profitable roads in the world is that which runs up the mountains from Santos to Jundiahy. This road has paid as much as 50 per cent. dividends, and for years it paid 10 per cent. semi-annually. The road was first built with a government guarantee of 5 per cent. It had a capital of $10,000,000. It increased this to $15,000,000, and it has now made its capital $28,000,000. It is now paralleling its lines in order to accommodate the enormous business which goes over it. It is the only connection which Santos has with the interior, and the enormous coffee shipments which go out from that port are brought from the plantations on this railroad. The trade of Santos amounts to $75,000,000 a year.

The road shoots out of Santos to the foot of the mountains. Here the locomotives are taken off, and the cars are dragged up the hill by stationary engines, which the cars are attached.

On partly all of the roads of Brezil there are dragged.

wind and unwind immense steel-wire capies, to which the cars are attached.

On nearly all of the roads of Brazil there are first, second and third-class cars. Few of them have sleepers, and the cars, as a rule, are by no means as good as ours. The Brazilian Central has a Pullman system, so that you can go from Rio Janeiro to Sao Paulo by that you can go from the variety to sale the seleoper.

Most of the trains, however, have only day coaches. The charges for baggage are very beavy. My trinks have usually cost me more than my railroad ticket. Nothing but a single handbag is allowed to be taken into the carriages. The man who brings more is not allowed to pass through the gates until he has handed it over to the express and baggage men. This is very inconvenient, especially as no baggage is checked which looks at all fragile or which is not carefully wrapped.

Money in Steamships.

I am told that there is a great deal of money in Brazilian steamships. The line on which I came to Para from Rio was the Brazilian Lloyd. This line has a monopoly of the coasting trade of Brazil. It has a large number of ships, which go from port to port, and which are always loaded with passengers and freight. Formerly it made a great deal of money, but since it has gone into the hands of the government it has steadily lost. Its ships are first-class steamers of from 2000 to 3000 tons, made in England and well equipped in every respect. I am told that the line will probably be for sale soon, and if so it would be a good investment for American capital.

We should have a line of steamships from New York to Rio de Janeiro and the other/ports on the east coast of South America, It is alorg this coast that the most of our trade with South America is, and this trade amounts to much more than $100,000,000 a year. Upon nearly every dollar of it we have to pay a percentage to the European steamships for carrying the goods. I am told that there is a great deal of money in Bra-

They Discriminate Against Us.

They discriminate against Us.

They discriminate against us and work in favor of their own countries. This is so even with some of the foreigners who operate with American capital down here. I heard of a German house not long ago which does a business of importing. It brings in about eighty-five thousand packages every month, its capital comes from the United States, but it boasts that it gets its imports almost exclusively from Germany.

ally good Portuguese or Spanish scholars. They have spent years in South America and know the people and trade thoroughly. They take things easily, and are content with small profits. They give from six to nine months' credit, and ask no payments until after the receipt of the goods.

Things That Would Pay.

There are a number of things down here which are worth investigation. The matter of an American bank is one. Our trade with Brazil last year amounted to $136,000,000. Almost the whole of it was done in Europcan exchange. An American bank at Rio de Janeiro, with branches at Sao Paulo, Santos, Bahia, Pernambuco, Para and Manaos could make big money. Interest rates here range from 10 per cent. upward. You can get good loans of 1 per cent. a month, and 1½ and 2 per cent. are not uncommon. The banks charge for everything, discount rates are high and all of the European banks, as far as I can learn, are making money.

It would seem to me that a big fortune might be made by a cold-storage company which would put up such plants in the larger cities. None of the Brazilian towns have cold storage houses, and meat and other things cannot be kept from one day to another. Take Pernambuco, a city of 200,000 people. The meat which is sold in the market must be eaten the day it is killed. It must be sold before it begins to spoil or the market inspectors will condemn it.

The result is that the price changes from hour to hour inspectors will condemn it.

The result is that the price changes from hour to hour during the day. When the market opens you will see over each butcher's stall a little slate, on which is marked the price of meat. As the day goes on the butcher rubs out the figures and changes the prices, so that meat which is worth 8 cents a pound at 7 o'clock in the morning, is offered for 4 cents a pound at noon. Indeed, dried beef in that market brings more per pound than fresh meat. If there were a cold-storage plant the meat could be kept as long as is desired, and vegetables, eggs and fruits could be stored away to await high prices.

I think there is money here in lee vegetables, and Indeed, a number of foreign transportation companies have combined against the United States to drive some of the steamers on the other side of the Atlantic out of the Brazilian market. They formed a trust last year and reduced the freight rates on coffee to about 10 cents a bag. When they had succeeded and had the field to themselves they raised the rate to 30 cents a bag, at which it stands at present.

This same combination charges a higher rate on all shipments of goods from New York to Brazil than it does from the European ports to Brazil. Some of the commission merchants of Rio Janeiro find it more profitable to ship flour from New York to Rio by way of Hamburg taking it over three thousand miles of additional ocean travel, and thereby getting a lower fregint. Consul-General Seegar says that one of the leading agricultural houses of Sao Paulo is forced to buy its fron of Europe, although the prices offered by American houses are lower. This is on account of the heavy freight rates from New York. Flour carried from New York to Rio pays a freight rate of 85 cents per barrel, while flour from Hamburg to Rio pays less than 70 cents a barrel. This system is carried on as to all sorts of importations. The Germans and the English fight us in every possible way, and the Germans are by no means scrupulous as to the honesty of their methods.

Smart German Traders. Smart German Traders.

Today the Germans are the best traders in South America. They are pushing their way into every port, and their merchants are to be found in every town. From Kaiser Wilhelm down they are doing all they can to further the trade interests of their country, and are succeeding. I have written how they have gobbled up the lowest province of Brazil. I find them in business here at Para. They own rubber plantations up the Amazon, and have their mercantile house on the frontiers of Ecuador and Bolivia.

They are doing quite a good deal in banking. They have one bank in Brazil which has a capital of more have one bank in Brazil which has a capital of more than $2,000,000, and another in the Argentine with a capital of $4,000,000, while there is a third in Chile whose capital is equal to that of the Brazilian bank. I am told that they have been buying nitrate property in Chile recently, and that they have put a great deal of money into railroads in Venezuela.

of money into railroads in Venezuela.

There is no end of small German enterprises. You find coffee houses here run by them, they have breweries scattered from one end of South America to the other, and there is a big tanning interest in Southern Chile which is run by them. They are by far the best pushers with regard to opening commercial houses in new centers. I found them selling goods in interior Bolivia and in the mountains of Peru, and I met the drummers of German houses every day. These drummers are usu-

There are a number of other opportunities here for the investment of capital and good business brains. Brazil as a country has hardly been prospected, and there are vast regions which are yet to be explored. There is only one thing that the investor must consider, and that is that it is not safe to make any investment in a South American country unless himself or his agent has been long enough on the ground to study the conditions and judge for himself.

DRAFTING DESIGNS ON SAND,

THE INDIAN USED ONLY AN AX. A KNIFE AND NOTCHED STICK TO BUILD A BOAT.

[BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

Given but an ax and a knife by way of tools, with never a screw, nail or bit of manufactured material, and the cleverest boat-builder would throw up in despair the job of building any sort of craft except a raft. And yet such a task under similar conditions I have seen done by an ignorant savage in the wilds of Northern Canada, about half way between New York and Klondike.

Leaving his bark wigwam early in the morning the Indian disappeared in the bush, an ax on his shoulder and carrying a keen-bladed hunting-knife. During the course of the day he returned with a huge roll of birch bark, two long saplings, a number of split cedar logs and a bundle of spruce roots.

Having deposited his burden on the beach he proceeded to draft the lines of his little craft upon the sand. Next he took his measurements with a notched stick and from these measurements drew designs upon the bark much as a tailor chalks his patterns upon the bark much as a tailor chalks his patterns upon cloth. He then deftly cut it to the required sizes and shapes, and having previously scraped and split his spruce roots until they resembled the strips of cone used for chair-seating, he neatly sewed the odd-looking pieces of bark together until the whole took on the shape of a tidy little boat, with finely-pointed and rounded bow and stern.

The cedar logs he split into stripes about an eighth of an inch thick and pointed at the ends. These he used to sheathe the inside of the cance.

To fashion the gunwale and the ribs was not such an easy matter. Taking his two saplings he made four long cedar strips about 1½½½ inches and just of sufficient length to bend round the top inside body of the cance and meet evenly at bow and stern. These pleces were first steamed in the hollow of an old log until sufficiently pliable, then neatly bending them to the required shape he bound two round the inside upper edges of the craft, making a substantial frame. The other two he used as a gunwale.

He next gave his attention to the ribs, shaping them from cedar with his knife, steaming and bending them to fit tightly each in its own particular place from stem to stern. The ribs were about two inches wide, pointed at both ends, so as to fit tightly into notches prepared for them in the frame, and were of different lengths, according to their respective positions, those toward the ends being proportionately shorter than those at the center or widest part of the cance. Three cedar cross-bars, which served the double purpose of seats, were then tightly bound across the frame, and nothing remained but to make the cance watertight.

A mixture of melted pine gum and charcoal smeared over the joints and allowed to harden, and the little craft was ready for launching. When finished it was about 9 feet long by 2½ feet wide at the center, and so light that a man could carry it upon his shoulders for miles at time.

sages can be passed through space, for great distances, from brain to brain, in the entire absence of any known means of physical communication between two widely-separated stations.

To explain, or even to express, the modus operandi of what occurs, it is necessary, in the present state of science, to assume the existence of that ethereal medium pervading space which has become for many reasons an indispensable scientific assumption, and also the existence of movements, tremors, or waves of energy, propagated though the ether, from the generating to the receiving station.

Now, if a small electric battery can send out tremors or waves of energy which are propagated through space for thirty miles or more, and can then be caught and manifested by a sensitive mechanical receiver, why may not such a mechanism as the human brain—which is perpetually, while in action, decomposing its own material, and which is in this respect analogous to an electric battery—generate and emit tremors or waves of energy which such sensitive "receivers" as other human brains might catch and feel, although not conveyed to them through the usual channels of sensation? Why might not such a battery as, say, the brain of Mr. Gladstone, radiate into space, when in action, quasi-magnetic waves of influence -which might affect other brains brought within the magnetic field of his great personality, much as the influence of a great magnet deflects a small compass needle? Many might affect other brains brought within the magnetic field of his great personality, much as the influence of a great magnet deflects a small compass needle? Many men (some perhaps of Mr. Gladstone's own colleagues) would admit their experience of such a quasi-magnetic force in his case, a predisposing and persuasive in-fluence quite apart from and independent of the in-fluence of spoken words.

ICE-BREAKERS FOR POLAR EXPLORATION.

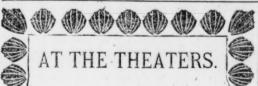

A great deal has appeared in print lately about ice-reakers employed by the Russians and built upon merican lines. The effectiveness of these boats is American lines. The effectiveness of these boats is phenomenal. The 3000-horse power American ice-breaker Sainte Marie is credited with steaming easily through ice two and one-half feet thick and with break-American lines. through ice two and one-half feet thick and with breaking down lee walls fifteen feet high. According to Nansen, the ice walls in the Arctic regions rarely attain the height of twenty-five feet. The polar sea is free from ice over a third of its surface, and in summer all the ice is more or less rotten. Hence, it is figured by authorities that an ice-breaker of 2000-horse power could find her way swiftly to the North Pole from latitude 78 deg. N., a distance of 720 miles. Two ice-breakers of 1000-horse power each would make even better work of it. Allowing for ice from four to seven feet thick, they would reach their goal in twelve days. As the ice-breakers would have a distinct commercial value after their return, there is, it is argued, absolutely no valid reason why a trip to the Pole should not be made forthwith.

NEW LEATHERS FOR SHOES.

At one time coarse russet shoes of the heaviest material were doled out to slaves on the Southern plantations, and russet shoes were long associated in the mind of the negro with servitude. For years after the war, Southern darkies refused to wear them, but now when colored shoes are so general the old prejudice has died away, and as many russets are sold South as elsewhere. Tanners, it is noted by a trade authority, are always introducing something new, and colored leathers were but an incident. There are large quantities of small Russian horse hides being imported now and tanned into what is called coltskin, and made into shoes. Western cowhide is made into a fine imitation kangaroo and alligator, and frequently counterfeits calfskin. There is a great foreign demand for American "upper leathers," which has increased so rapidly that exports are now nearly double the shipments of sole-leather. one time coarse russet shoes of the heaviest ma-

It would be easier to answer the question, "What is the best opera written in each country?" been written?" It would be easier to answer the question, "What is the best opera written in each country?" and even that would elicit various opinions. An Italian would probably say Rossin's "Barber of Seville," or Verdi's "Aida;" a Frenchman would say "Carmen," or "Faust;" a German might prefer Mozart's "Don Juan," Weber's "Euryanthe," or Beethoven's "Fidelio." No one is authorized to dictate a categoric answer.

There is a movement on foot among certain rich New York music-lovers to engage Lamoureux as conductor for a permanent orchestra there. This is the fourth season that the proposition has been made to him, says the Boston Herald. It is to be hoped that the effort may be successful, as the agent Frenchman has lost a fortune in Paris while attempting to popularize Wagner's "Lohengrin," a few years ago.

DENVERITE in Chicago, who writes me that he is still a Maud Adams onthusiast, despite some misgivings created by her performance of Juliet, says of the Frohman excursion into Shakespeare: "The signal feature of it all is its excellence as a production. Miss Arthur, who was the spring Juliet in Chicago, and who spent $40,000 in mounting and cos tuming her revival of the tragedy, gained no such effects as these. Miss Arthur's scene painters were garish. Everything was sacrificed to color. The modern and ancient were hopelessly mixed. The contrary is found in the Frohman production, where each touch seems to have been consistent and carefu'. There are few anachronisms. Of course, Mr. Frohman's 'version' of the immortal love story is at times laughable, for he has cut unmercifully and combined scenes that are impossible of combination, but his mounting and stage pictures are as beautiful as they well can be. No more vivid scene has been presented than the street turmoil between the followers of the rival houses in the pictures are as beautiful as they well can be. You hold vivid scene has been presented than the street turmoil between the followers of the rival houses in the first act, while the ballroom scene, not so elaborate as in the Arthur performance, was nevertheless far better done. It is said that there is but one person in the world who really believes Miss Adams can play Juliet and that is Mr. Frohman. If he is contented in this belief, then his happiness ought not, perhaps, to be destroyed. It is, in truth, a strange and wonderful reading this undoubtedly magnetic little westerner gives, but, oh, it isn't Juliet! The potion scene was hopelessly hysterical, and the best that can be said for the balcony feature was that it was charming and pretty. An extraordinary feature of the performance was the effect Miss Adams obtained from one scene the average Juliet makes nothing of. This is where the lovelorn heroine seeks advice of the friar and is given the sleeping draught. This bit was worked up wonderfully well, and Juliet's exit was followed impulsively by the most enthusiastic applause. It was certainly unfortunate that the test scene came so soon after and was so lamentably weak. Mr. Faversham is not the worst Romeo in the category, but it must be remembered that most Romeos are a pretty sorry lot. One was continually deploring his lack of a dress suit, for it really seemed that he ought to have been making love in a parlor and that presently he would give a Pinero epigram. Mr. Faversham can never be Shakespearean, nor can Mr. Hackett, whose Mercutio was rather the best thing of the evening. And altogether one reads with some comfort Mr. Frohman's progamme assurance that 'next season Miss Adams will resume her tour with. "The Little Minister" and Mr. Hackett and Mr. Faversham will continue in the successes in which they have lately appeared. "—[Denver Pest.

An interesting fact concerns the manner in which Mary Anderson (now Mrs. de Navarro) secured her box for Miss, Maude Adams's debut as Juliet at the Empire Theater, New York City. It is known that Mrs. de Navarro had no intention of going to the theaters during her present visit to this country. She had not, in fact, been in an American place of amusement for over fitteen years. But that famous Juliet of the past—that lovely Galatea, grand Hermione, enrapturing Perdita—could not resist the temptation to witness the début, as the sad-eyed, love-lorn daughter of the house of Capulet, of a young actress of whom she had heard so much, and who was playing child parts when "Our Mary" left the stage. Perhaps she remembered her own first appearance as Juliet, when she had to borrow most of her dresses from the wife of the proprietor of the theater in which she was playing in Louisville, ky., and apart from her sympathy with the profession, was anxious to see how it would be with Maude Adams, already loved by all playgoers, who was going to play Juliet for the first time and in the most fashionable theater in America, where the seats could have been sold over and over again, so great was the interest of the public in it, before an audience representing the wealth, fashion, beauty and culture of the metropolis, and under the guidance of a manager of unlimited resources, courage and enterprise. At all events, Mrs. de Navarro decided to go, but reached that decision only on the Saturday before the performance, and then she was unable to secure seats on her application by telephone to the box office. Maybe, womanlike, she then wanted more than ever to go to the Empire. In her difficulty, she wrote to Mr. Frohman's representatives, asking if there were any possible way by which she could secure two, three or four desirable seats in the orchestra. She had, perhaps, heard that for the few boxes to be sold there were about four hundred applications. Now, Mr. Frohman s always discouraged the speculators, and his representatives c ing. This box has always been occupied by Mr. Frohman's family on opening nights, and had never been used for any other purpose on these occasions since the theater was built, seven years ago, and seldom, if ever, at any other time. The result was that Thomas Shea, the business manager of the Empire Theater, had to send a friend quietly to these very speculators with whom he was at war, in the interest of his manager, and have four seats purchased. These, in the last row of the orchestra, were occupied by Mr. Evolpman's of the orchestra, were occupied by Mr. Frohman's folks. As is already well known, Mrs. de Navarro went behind the scenes after the potion episode, took little Miss Adams in her arms and warmly congratulated her on the success she had achieved.

The following eminently sensible communication has been sent to the dramatic editor of the Washington Post, and it has a local application which Los Angeles audiences might well afford to heed:

"In behalf of theater-goers, to whom the artistic harmony of the play is essential to its enjoyment, I should like to say a few words on a subject much talked of by the few, but, alas, too little heeded by the many players who otherwise shun the inartistic, but are lacking in this one respect. It is the matter of cur-

tain calls. The past season it has been especially noticeable that after an effective exit or the final thrilling tableau of a powerful scene, regardless of the discillusion of ideal in the minds of the audience, the actors return, still in their characters, to the painted scene which only a moment previous they have made real by their art. The illusion vanishes; instead of harmony, we have discord. We say, 'It is but a play after all, and the heroes are but play-actors.' The object of theater-going is defeated; for why do we go save for the illusion and harmony an artist presents to our minds?

"Of the plays most recently seen here, 'Nathan Hale,' by the Goodwins, and 'Romeo and Juliet,' by Maude Adams, William Faversham and James K. Hackett, have contained the most jarking examples of misplaced curtain calls. In the former, at the end of the third act, when Nathan and Alice escape through the enemy's lines, and can be heard galloping off in the distance, while the British officer stands baffled too dazed to move, the curtain rises on Nathan, Alice and the officer, with clasped hands, bowing to the audience. The picture was spoiled, the enthusiasm dampened. In the potion scene of 'Romeo and Juliet,' when the audience had been roused to excitement as the curtain rose several times over the prostrate body of Juliet and then on Juliet, standing up, the same thing occurred. Again, in the tomb, Romeo and Juliet were suddenly resurrected.

"In direct contrast, the Mercutio of Mr. Hackett died when he left the scene. The actor, the man, came before the curtain to acknowledge the applause. Mercutio was dead. Coming before the curtain in this manner safefied the audience and preserved the artistic hermony so much desired. Was it not a better method?"

of more than usual interest.

Sometimes an audience likes to poke fun at an actor when a reasonable pretext is afforded. At an interminably long performance of "Monte Carlo," with Charles Fechter in the character of the hero, the curtain rose for the last act at 12:45 in the morning. Techter was discovered sitting in a contemplative attitude. He neither moved nor spoke. Just then a clear, sad voice in the gallery exclaimed, "I hope we are not keeping you up, zir!" The effect may be imagined.

My experience has proven to me that there is more virtue in the theatrical profession and less cause for disorder among actors than there are in the ranks of the wealthy society people. Of course, it must be conceded that a woman on the stage is more exposed to temptation than her sisters in private life, and also that the nemadic character of their lives makes home life the exception. radadadahhhhhhhhhhhhh MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

Weekly Review.

EORGE LEHMANN, in Musical America writes thus readably of the violin:

"It is no longer possible to doubt the super iority of the violin over all other musical instruments. Mankind in general has paid the 'king of instruments' the most glowing tributes. Languid and unemotional royalty has, time and again, been roused to intense enthusiasm or affected unto tears by the wide and won-drous variety of sentiment which fiddlers have expressed through the simple medium of fiddle and bow. Even Nero found himself able to relieve his pent-up feelings only when engaged in fiddling an obligato to the cruel sufferings which he inflicted on innocent Christians.

"No, the fiddle's true position in the world of musical instruments can no longer be questioned. Recent scientific experiments in London and Paris have brought scientific experiments in London and Paris have brought curious facts to light regarding the effect of the fiddle on the wildest and most ferocious animals; and the results of these experiments must surely delight all fiddlers and make them feel proud of their chosen instrument. To the credit of the monkeys, be it said, the fiddle had an instantaneous and most soothing effect. At the very first measure of a classical melody (by Bach, I believe—which goes to prove that the monkey's musical instinct is of a surprisingly high order,) all the monkeys assembled for the experiment ceased certain operations in which they commonly exhibit a phenomenal degree of technical skill. Indeed, their attitude is said to have been of the intent, and respectful kind displayed by genuine music-lovers at a quartette concert. "The hippopotamus, though not so keenly appreciative as the monkeys, 'rose, wagged his huge head from side to side, and again sunk back linto his pool." The pumas gave unmistakable evidence of latent musical feeling; and they also disclosed the remarkable fact that they are a domestic, home-loving animal, for, when 'Home, Sweet Home' was played with touching simplicity, they betrayed deep emotion, and 'came forward with signs of satisfaction.' The long-abused and misunderstood coyote gave the scientific men something to think about. His musical cravings were simply insatiable. When the music ceased, he pleadingly extended a paw for more. Even the crocodile destroyed old-time fallacies by 'sighing and gurgling' and other indications of a gentle and music-loving nature.

"In strange contrast to the effect of the fiddle on wild animals; the flute and the clarinet, though performed on by most able musicians, falled to give enjoyment or curious facts to light regarding the effect of the fiddle animals; the flute and the clarinet, though performed on by most able musicians, failed to give enjoyment or arouse sympathy. Vultures, condors and eagles vehemently protested against the one-sidedness of reed instruments; and, it is said, the kangaroo sat on his tail and became strangely pugnacious

"All of which reminds me of an intelligent dog of my acquaintance, that, on a certain occasion, some years ago, startled me with its musical preferences and keen discrimination. The dog and I were excellent friends; so I used to play for him, almost every day—Bach, Beethoven, Brahms, in short, all such compositions as I felt would delight his aesthetic soul. And he would come and lie at my feet, every now and then looking the approval and pleasure he could not utter.

"One night he seemed to be in a sad and retrospective mood. I started the G minor concerto by Max Bruch. The prelude had no effect whatever. The glorious adagio moved him to tears. But you should have seen that dog after I had played the brilliant opening measures of the finale! At first he showed all his teeth and sneezed most violently. Then he tore across the room, barking wildly, and playing havoe with the brica-brac; and before I could stop him in his mad career, he had destroyed a pair of curtains, broken a pane of glass, frightened the friendly and peaceful cat into a convulsion, and caused a zealous policeman to rap his club frantically for assistance.

"I have never again experimented with the Bruch concerto on this or any other dog; but, inclining to the belief that science would be the richer for such an experiment, I humbly recommend my experience to all who seek truth and wisdom, without, however, assuming any responsibility as to consequences.

When the Pilgrim Fathers landed at Plymouth, says the Musical Age, they brought with them only five tunes, not printed, but traditional; and as they held all secular music to be a snare of Satan, these melodies were the entire music of the colony at the outset. Among these tunes were "Old Hundred" and "York." A conference of the Rev. Thomas Weld, John Eliot and Richard Mather led to an extension of the art and to the printing of the Bay Psalmbook in 1640. Even the slight advance made by this early colonial book was regarded as heretic and sacrilegious by many, who held that sacred matters ought not to be tampered with. The old tunes were regarded from a religious and not from an artistic standpoint, and the Puritan always doffed his cap when he heard the melody of any one of them.

[Musical Age:] No artist of modern times, perhaps no man of his day, has exercised such a charm over women as Paderewski. His greatness as a planist, his romantic appearance, his deference to women, the great halo of golden hair, the dreamy blue eyes, the soft, sweet voice and the air of sadness and delicacy have made him irresistible, and he has been fairly mobbed by women in every big city in this country. Time and time again it had been reported that Paderewski was about to marry, but his friends said that he would never marry again; that the memory of his dead wife was always with him. His fame came to him when he was 30 years old. He was married before then, and he and his wife, to whom he was devotedly attached, suffered many hardships. She died of consumption, lacking many of the necessities of an invalid.

The musical writer of the Philadelphia Times makes The musical writer of the Philadelphia Times makes these pertinent suggestions concerning pupils' recitals: "The teacher has to bear-the burden of unrealized expectations, and the pupil is disappointed at the outcome of his or her efforts. More than this, the effects of such appearances upon the career of the student, provided they have ambitions in that direction, are burdensome. Their unripened efforts are remembered, and it needs more than an ordinary success to obliterate a first impression."

"While the writer admits that there may be some excuse for graduates, he can find no convincing argument for the exploitation of pupils of a lengthened term of study. There are exceptions, of course, but they are few. The judgment passed upon the ability of the teacher based upon the art of the pupil, or the lack of it, is not only unfair, but misleading, except where deterioration is manifest, for the reason that comparison of results with the work of other teachers cannot be made with any degree of certainty. Teachers are molding different material, and, while one may be fortunate enough to have pupils of talent, the other teacher of equal ability may be laboring with mediocrity."

tizky, at Vienna, to Conductor Emil Paur will be found of interest, in that Victor Thrane is to tour Herr Petschnikoff in America next season:

"My Dear Friend: A very extraordinary artist, the famous violin virtuoso, Herr Alex Petschnikoff, will appear during the next season in America. He desires a letter of introduction from me to you. I gladly take this opportunity to send to you my portrait and at the same time to beg you to support him by your powerful influence in every possible way. You will learn to recognize in him an artist of the very first rank and of inconceivable versatility. Grand, beautiful tone, noble technic, distinguished conception of old and new masters, bold and brilliant bravura united with deep and warm delivery, have in a brief time placed him in the rarks of the great performers on his instrument. So, too, has the Vienna public, whom a little while ago he electrified with a rendition of unprecedented perfection of Tschaikowsky's Concerto.

"I am sure that you as well as the American public, which knows how to value everything great and beautiful, will subscribe to what I say.

"I send my most cordial greeting to you and yours, and remain, your sincere admirer and friend, Theodor Leschetizky.

"P. S.—You will oblige me very much if you will place these lines, if Herr Petschnikoff wishes, at his disposal, in case they can be of any service to him with the public."

Sims Reeves, the most famous tenor singer of his day, who retired from the stage to teach in 1892, and six years afterward was obliged by failing health to give up teaching also, was so careful of his voice in his palmy days that he declared his conscientiousness had cost him at least $400,000.

"I have lived the life of an anchorite," he once said. "You really do not know, and the public do not know, what self-denial I have practiced, what deprivation I have suffered during my career. I am the most careful and abstemious liver in the world."

He preferred to disappoint an audience by not appearing rather than by singing when his throat was not in the best condition. He was most thorough in all his practicing. He says:

"I have always studied my words; I have read them and phrased them in every possible way, and asked myself what they meant, and interpreted them according to my own feeling. I walk up and down, trying this line and trying that, until I feel that I have struck the right idea."

His getting ready to sing was always a more laborious effort than the singing itself.

Before Emil Sauer sailed for Europe he granted an interview in which he expressed the following opinions regarding America and his art:

"I have been successful in this country—more successful than I expected. The American people are magnificent. They are the most enthusiastic, and perhaps the most appreciative, people in the world. This is especially true of New York and the East. In the extreme West, of course, one does not expect such cultured appreciative audiences as there are here. But here in New York is the best audience a pianist can find. It is better than Berlin even, because Berlin is blase. There the audience has ceased to enjoy—it criticises only. New York is Berlin, Paris and Vienna in one.

"After a while, when the ocean trip can be made in "After a while, when the ocean trip can be made in two or three days, and great artists can come here as easily as they now pass from Vienna to Paris and to Berlin, the New York audience will be blase, too. But you have perhaps twenty years yet of keen appreciation, and will be for that time the source of inspiration to all great artists of the world.

"Piano-playing," he said, referring to the present condition of that art, "is at its culmination. The highest skill and perfection were reached by Rubinstein and Liszt; but in this generation there are four or five who, in powers of technique, expression and interpretation, are their peers."

Herr Sauer said that it is his plan to spend the summer at his home in Dresden. He will not play again, he said, until January next, when he expects to make a short tour in Vienna, Paris, Berlin and London.

The Rusian tour of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Nikisch, was almost a triumphal procession, according to the accounts in the Berlin papers. Great enthusiasm was shown at the four concerts in St. Petersburg, the receipts being nearly $10,000; at Odessa so great was the sale for two concerts that a third was given.

The composer is said to consider it his best work, and feels sure of its instant success with a Parisian audience.

VALUABLE SUGGESTIONS FOR ACQUIR-ING AND PRESERVING HEALTH.

At the recent graduating exercises of the College of Medicine of the Uni-PHYSICIANS AND HYGIENIC versity of Southern California, the physician who delivered the address of the evening, referring to several schools of hygienic healing, said that while these people "attempt to apply their one idea to cure all things, the regular physician uses all things to cure anything, but each in its proper place."

This somewhat involved statement does not by any means entirely dispose of the question at issue. It is true that those who make a specialty of various hygienic methods of healing disease are too often inclined to see in the particular remedy which they have affected a cure-all, and to belittle other remedial agents. Again, while it is true that many experienced physi-cians set great store by such natural methods of healing as diet, exercise, bathing and massage, and are dis-posed to give the healing power of nature as much chance as their patients will allow them, yet, on the other hand, there are still too many physicians, in this enlightened age, who keep all their remedies in bottles, and are inclined to ignore the fact that disease is an effort of nature to throw morbid matter out of the system; also that, if they will only give Mother Nature half a chance, she will succeed.

It is only fair to add that a majority of this latter class are young men fresh from medical colleges, also that experienced physicians who desire to adopt a natural and common-sense treatment are too often met with the opposition of unreasonable patients, who in the first place will not exert the necessary will power to give up bad habits and adopt hygienic rules, expecting to see the results of a quarter of a century of wrong living cured by some mysterious drug, as if through magic, and in the second place would complain that they are not getting the value of their money if the honest physician should simply give them some sound advice as to their method of living.

In order to effect a cure, it needs a good patient as well as a good physician. In fact, it often happens that more depends upon the patient than on the physician. Until recently, France has always INTEMPERANCE been pointed to as an exceedingly temperate country, so far as the consumption of ardent alcoholic beverages is concerned. Throughout the greater part of France, until within the past twenty years or so, a light native wine, containing but a very small percentage of alcohol, has been almost the only beverage of the great majority of Frenchmen. Of late, however, there appears to have been a great and alarming change in this direction. It is claimed that the French are becoming a nation of tipplers, and the danger has aroused thinking men of that country to undertake an aggressive campaign against intemperance

A French scientist has recently published figures showing that the French are today the most intemperate people on earth. In the Figaro, it is shown that close to fifteen litres, or about sixteen quarts, of alcohol is consumed every year for each of the 38,000,000 people in the republic. The French find that, instead of heading the alcoholic list, Germany and the British Islands come third and fourth, as Belgium takes second place after France, but with nearly one-third less in its per capita consumption. Fifth in the list is Switzerland, the home of absinthe, and then, in the order named, there follow Italy, Holland, the United States, Sweden, Norway and Canada. Norway is the most temperate of all European countries. Canada leads the world in its moderation, with a per capita average of over two litres a year. A Paris correspondent of the New York Sun says:

New York Sun says:

"Drinking shops in the poorer quarters of Paris are open at 4 o'clock in the morning, and even then there are shivering men and women who have braved the nipping air to 'kill the little worm,' as they call their thirst for drink. The use of neat drinks is steadily growing. So fierce is the appetite for the strongest distillations that the law compe's chemists to sell methylated spirits only in colored form, which means that they are poisoned. Alcohol from wood is deadly, but a popular drink. In Paris they drink ether, in the north of France turpentine is growing in popularity, north of France turpentine is growing in popularity, and here and there a case is found where kerosene oil is taken, although this is generally done secretly. Normandy is the most drunken of all the departments in the republic. While the fishermen and male pessants of the north coast are bad enough the women are worse. besotted have many of these people become that ey work but five hours a week, earning only enough they work but five hours a week, earning only enough for the barest necessaries of life, and to keep themselves in drink. Much the same is done with grapes in some regions.

"The evils of absinthe drinking are growing. It is only a few years since two old women living in a secluded mountain valley in Switzerland, gave out their secret for brewing a drink of rare quality from wormwood, but now absinthe is known around the world. Nowhere has its sale grown to so threatening propor-tions as in France, where its excessive use annually drives many to insanity. In the better cafes absinthe costs 50 centimes, or 10 cents, but in the dives it is only 3 sous a glass. As such it is little less than a poison, especially when a dash of vitriol is added to give it an extra bite. Vitriol is regularly used in many of the cheap drinks, and even in some of the better ones."

French students have organized a temperance league, and some of the legislators are endeavoring to obtain legislative assistance. At present there is in France a public drinking-house to every twenty-four persons. It is proposed to gradually lessen this excessive number. The socialist press of France is lending its support admitting that the opportunity to drink is the workingman's greatest enemy. The drinking problem is also occupying the attention of other countries of continental Europe. At the International Temperance Conference, held in Paris in April last, twenty-one countries were represented by more than a thousand dele The next Congress will meet at Vienna, in 1901, when the Austrian government has assured it a wel-For the first time in the history of European expositions, there will be a temperance building at Paris next year. Plans have been drawn and stock is being subscribed by prominent French people, for a handsome structure which will serve as a "soft drinks" café, on the ground floor. It is intended to use the 1900 exposition as a vehicle for widely spreading the movement. On the continent, the most powerful temperance association is the Blue Cross, which has a membership of more than 23,000, and operates in Switzerland, Belgium, France and other countries.

ERRORS IN DIAGNOSES.

That physicians frequently make mistakes in diagnosing common diseases was recently again shown in Los Angeles. A physician had de-clared a case of sickness to be measles, whereas the acting Health Officer insisted that it was scarlet fever, causing a sign with the name of that disease inscribed thereon to be placed on the house where the patient lay The board supported the Health Officer, in spite of adverse reports from several physicians. When two other children in the same house were taken ill with measles, all doubts as to the nature of the disease were removed, and the misleading sign was taken down.

It would be unreasonable to expect that physicians should not occasionally make mistakes, for they are mortal, like the rest of us. Laymen would be less inclined to call attention to such slips were it not that the medicos are too frequently inclined to adopt a dic-tatorial and impatient attitude toward those who dare to express opinions upon sanitary questions without having first obtained the right to place M. D. after their

In the sensational advertisements of healers, which occupy a large amount of space in the newspapers nowadays, the promise is frequently held out that no charge will be made unless the remedy does what is claimed for it. A test is to be made, in Pasadena, of the validity of this guarantee. A man who canvassed that place some months ago for a rupture treatment, agreeing to relieve cases previously deemed incurable, or return the money, has been served with writs on behalf of two citizens and was cited to appear before the City Recorder.

Should this case be decided in favor of the plaintiffs, we may expect to see a perfect avalanche of similar suits commenced, as some of the underworked legal luminaries of Los Angeles would, doubtless, see in this a fine field for their activity.

TOO MUCH

Dr. George E. Page thinks that Americans wear altogether too much clothing in warm weather, and believes that much sickness is caused thereby. People retain their winter underflannels for some time after the warm weather sets in, fearing to catch cold, and perspire under heavy clothing, when they would be comfortable without any clothes at all. Dr. Page says:

Dr. Page says:

"The fact that the skin is a breathing organ, that the millions of little capillary blood vessels exhale carbonic acid and abserb oxygen, just as do the blood vessels of the 'inner lungs,' sand that this vitally important' work of purification is hindered by clothing, every extra layer of which adds to the mischief, is not at all realized by the masses, and is fully comprehended by few individuals. The naked races never have colds, catarrh, bronchial or any sort of pulmonary disorders until they become so hedged in by civilization that they are compelled to change their mode of 'dress;' then, as we know, they die off like sheep with the foot rot, and always with the diseases above named. The gospel of health for warm weather is to keep cool; to feel even cold at times means to counteract the mischief of yesterday's and tomorrow's heat. Summer disorders arise from the accumulation of heat, not from catching cold."

The open-air treatment for phthisis FRESH AIR -a common sense treatment, which FOR has long been urged by sensible physicians and hygienists—is constantly attracting more and more attention throughout the werld, and promises before long to cast in the shadeas it should—the numerous theories for the cure of consumption by inoculation and other dubious methods, which are put forth from time to time. A London medical journal, in its June issue, devotes much space to a study of tuberculosis, containing articles dealing with the disease from various points of view. It is a noticeable fact that all the writers agree that climate, hygiene and diet are the most powerful remedial agents. An atmosphere free from moisture and with abundance of sunshine like that of Egypt, is declared to be the ideal one for a consumptive. It will be remembered that, a few months ago, the opinion of an English physician, living in the island of Jamatca, was republished in this department, in which he strongly combated this theory, claiming that wonderful cures had been effected in the extremely moist climate of Jamaica. However, the consensus of expert opinion is strongly in favor of a dry air for consumptives, either hot or cold. Above all, however, the important point is that they should obtain an ample supply of air, by living practically out of doors.

If American invalids desire to find "an atmosphere free from moisture, and with an abundance of sunshine, like that of Egypt," they cannot do better than come to Southern California.

VISITS.

The trial of a doctor's suit was published in a Connecticut newspaper DANGEROUS some years ago, in which a witness was called for the purpose of approving the correctness of the doctor's bill. The witness was asked by the lawyer whether the doctor did not make several visits after the patient was out of danger? "No," replied the witness, "I considered the patient in danger so long as the doctor continued his visits."-[The Sanitarian.

J. C. Black, foreman of one of the A RATTLE-Kern County Land Company's large SNAKE STORY. ranches near Bakersfield, vouches for the following rattlesnake story:

When living in Texas, his brother, then a mere child, was bitten by a rattlesnake. They found two rattlers near where he had been playing, killed them, cut them into sections three or four inches long, and applied the cross section to the wound, after scarifying it slightly. The flesh about the wound had turned black for quite a distance.

The section of snake adhered to the wound for some minutes, a dark, thick blood dripping from the opposite end. Then the piece of snake dropped away from the wound, and they applied another portion, with the same result, only that it adhered for a shorter time. A third portion was applied in the same way, and after that no more portions would adhere. The discoloration had all disappeared while they watched it, the child went again to his play, and never suffered any ill effects in consequence of the bite.

This, says Mr. Black, is something everyone should know, as the snake itself is a remedy always at hand. The only care necessary to be exercised is to kill the snake before he has time to bite himself, as he is inclined to do, thus destroying the neutralizing power of his own flesh.

Two men were found lying dead this spring near Delano. In each case the dead snake was lying near, but they did not know of the remedy within their reach, and each succumbed to the poison, when his life might have been saved.

BREATHING THROUGH THE NOSE.

In an article on the care of the throat and ear, published in the Popular Science Monthly, the following occurs on the necessity of breathing through the nose:

"The nose, however, has a much more important function to perform-viz., in respiration. Strange to say, however, this has only recently been realized, and it is even yet not well understood. You have all observed that, when you had a severe 'cold' which prevented nasal breathing, the next morning the mouth and throat were dry and parched and frequently inflamed, the voice sometimes hoarse, and there was a general feeling of de-pression. While the progress of the inflammatory process may be a factor in this, still the mechanical obstruction of the nose from any cause whatsoever will have a similar effect. In patients in whom, for various reasons, an artificial opening has been made in the trachea, the air of the room has to be heated to an almost intolerable point and saturated with moisture, or severe bronchial inflammation will soon develop in the patient, simply because the nose has not taken an active part in the act of respiration. These effects, therefore, clearly demonstrate that the nasal passages have an important function to perform in the breathing process, Summarized in a few words, it is simply to warm, moisten, and clean the air which we inhale.

"The healthy nostrils are anatomically and physiology."

"The healthy nostrils are anatomically and physiologically so formed that when the current of air passes through them it will have been freed of its mechanical impurities, warmed to within a few degrees of the temperature of the body, and moistened to saturation. This has been experimentally demonstrated."

DRINKING It is proven every year, to the satisfaction of medical men and scientists generally that a strong desire for in-HABIT AND toxicating drinks is transmissible from parent to child, An exchange says:

"The dissolute life and profligate habits of the father seldom fail of their influence on the son. Careful training or lack of temptation sometimes counteracts the inherited tendencies toward evil. All too often, however, the tainted victim of an ancestor's sins breaks through all restraints, and his friends wonder at his evil cours

This fact furnishes one of the strongest arguments "This fact furnishes one of the strongest arguments for prohibition. The craving for strong drink, which is in many families transmitted from generation to generation, becomes the stronger as it is indulged. The rule of the old Mosaic code, that the sins of the fathers shall be visited upon the children, even to the third and fourth generation, finds its literal fulfillment in the physical law. Hence the evil becomes an increasing and progressive one. The strength of the appetite grows as rapidly as a snowball rolled along the ground. We must remember that the drink evil is not one which remains stationary, but one which requires the most strenuous efforts to hold in check."

THE WOMAN OF THE TIMES. By Herself.

By Herself.

HE bravest man in the world lives in Boston. He is braver than was Admiral Dewey when he lead his ships over the enemy's mines and under the enemy's guns and square in the enemy's face into Manila Bay. He is braver than was Lieut. Hobson when he sank the Merrimac in Santiago Harbor. Indeed, there is nobody who can compare with him in courage and in hardihood. He is the Rev. Dr. E. Westchester Donald, and he is the rector of that Boston church which was under the charge of Phillips Brooks for so many years. And he does not believe in women's colleges. Right there in the hotbed of the higher education for women, in the greenhouse for women's intelcation for women, in the greenhouse for women's intellectuality, he has publicly declared that he is opposed to women's colleges; that the average college course causes a woman to become a blue stocking and sets her apart from the rest of the society, so that she does not accomplish the good which she ought to do. Now, surely, to face the cannon's mouth itself does not require such bravery and such determination as must uphold be soul of a man who lives in Boston, and proposes to continue living there, and yet dares to pronounce openly and defiantly such sentiments as these. Of course, he is getting his recompense. The guns, big and little, have all been trained on him, and grapeshot, canister and shell, to say nothing of gun-cotton projectiles, are being fairly rained down upon him and everything in his immediate vicinity. It must be admitted that Dr. Donald, under this assault, has not kept up the show of surpassing courage with which he began his attack. He has sneaked under cover and will not say another word about it, and the women think they have got the better of him. But the meed for unparalleled bravery—is it possible to say also gallantry?—must still be awarded to him for the brilliancy and dash of his first onslaught. Perhaps he will come out again and have something more to say after he has calculated the enemy's range.

Dr. Donald can hardly be accounted a remnant of the old guard that opposed the higher advention of we lectuality, he has publicly declared that he is opposed

Dr. Donald can hardly be accounted a remnant of the old guard that opposed the higher education of women for so long, but from whom nothing has been heard for many a day, though he does speak in a voice which sounds somewhat as did theirs. Rather, he is one voice of a new discontent with the education-for-women movement which comes from the very inner circles of that movement itself. A faint call can be heard now and then, apparently the prelude of a louder wail which is likely to startle the ears of the world a few years hence. A little whimper came from the women's college of Brown University a few months ago, when the young women petitioned the faculty to let them off from the debating exercises which are part of the course at that institution because—Oh, ears of Miss Anthony and Mrs. Stanton, did you ever hear the like!—because the debates were too hard for them and tested their powers too severely. Ten years ago would any woman student in any college in all this land have admitted that there was anything in the course of any college which was too hard for her? She would have let herself be drawn and quartered first, and all her fellow-girl students would have been ready to draw and quarter her if she had been such a craven. It begins to look as if the dear girls are thinking that it isn't so nice after all to keep step with the boys in the climb up the hill of knowledge and would like to have the boys carry their wraps and help them over the rough places.

Another little voice of similar tone is to be heard in Mrs. Stanford's princely bequest of a few weeks ago to Stanford University. For she made only two conditions in the gift of all those millions to the institution which is the apple of her eye. One of those conditions is that the women students of the university must be limited to 500 in number. Mrs. Stanford is a woman of unusual shrewdness and business capacity, as she has shown, by her management of the vast estate which she has handled to better advantage and made more productive than did her husband. In whatever she does nowadays she is moved solely by the desire to benefit the Stanford University, directly or indirectly. It is her sole earthly care. It represents to her both husband and son and it would be as impossible for her to do anything which she was not convinced would be for its benefit as it would be impossible for her to say aught against the memory of that son, to whose memory, it is a monument. Therefore, Mrs. Stanford must have been convinced, by observation of affairs at Stanford University and by talk with professors and students at that and other colleges, that in order for a co-educational college to give the best results the number of women students must be kept very much in the minority.

In most co-educational institutions there is a feeling among the men students which the researches and students are sudents.

In most co-educational institutions there is a feeling among the men students, which the passage of years of co-education has left as strong as it was at the beginning, that any course of study which is very much affected by the young women is one that the young men ought not to care much about. They say, de these young men who have sat in the classrooms with the young women month after month, that any course is ruined if the girls begin to flock after it. For they feel that the girls are after the easiest things they can find, and if a certain course is particularly attractive to the young women it is one that things they can find, and if a certain course is particularly attractive to the young women it is one that is not worthy of the attention of the masculine intellect. The Woman has known something about a good many co-educational institutions, and whether they were of the sort in which there is an antagonism between the men and the girls, as in most of those in the extreme East, especially in New England, or whether they were of the sort whose influences foster a feeling of friendship between the students of the two sexes and make them chums and finally lead them to more or less of intermarriage, as is frequently the case with those of the West, The Woman has always found some trace of this feeling. And The Woman is compelled to admit that, with a pretty large percentage of the girl students, there is justice in it. It is true, that the easiest courses are usually those which the girls will find most useful in their after life, but in addition to this, there still remains the fact that about three-fourths of the girl students in every coeducational institution are not enamored of good, hard work, do not wish to make really severe mental effort and will not do it if they can get out of it. There are, of course, notable exceptions, in every college which receives women students. Everywhere it is possible to find the exceptional woman student who surpasses the men of her class in application, in love of work, in mental grasp, in scholarship. But colleges are not built and conducted for the sake of the exceptions. And it begins to look very much as if the pendulum which marks the progress of the movement for the higher education of women is trembling on the verge of a backward swing.

It is surely a very fitting time for the ingenuity of man to turn itself to the problem of altering climate to suit his needs and comfort. Not in any insignificant way, such as making a quarter of an inch of rain to fall-gover a hundred or so square miles, but in the mass, by the continent full. It is very desirable, for instance, that the Pacific Coast should be secured against dry seasons, and the people of the cyclone-swept East would be even more delighted to know that they could be relieved of all danger of those wind-twisters. It would probably be to the advantage of California that the cyclones should not be suppressed, but should be allowed to revisit the earth with every change of the moon for the persuasion of the benighted farmers of the East to turn their faces hitherward and leave cyclones and splintered houses behind them. But California does not wish her own advantage at the expense of her sister States, and she would be quite willing for lowa and Kansas and Nebraska and Minnesota and all the rest of them to be freed from those caresses of the circling breeze which make wrecks of their faces, even if she were not advantaged herself in the matter. But it really seems quite likely that whatever would help one section would also help the other. May there not be some connection between the awful storms which ravaged all the East during the months of last winter and the dry weather which afflicted the Pacific Coast? And is it not possible that the unusual prevalence of severe high winds and cyclonic disturbances east of the Rocky Mountains has the same origin as the constant fog and the cool ocean breeze which have been along the coast this spring, an uninterrupted comfort? If the weather wiseacres are right in their theory that it is the erratic course of the Japan current up in the neighborhood of Berling Sea that decrees whether or not we of this - Coast shall have during with the castern slopes of the country. At any rate, i

It may seem a very daring and even puerile idea that mankind could mount far enough into the upper air and dive deep enough into the ocean to abolish cyclones in the one case and change the course of a mighty river of the ocean in the other. But it may be taken as a surety that nothing which man's mind is able to conceive is beyond his powers to realize. If the faculties of mankind once set themselves upon the problem of regulating climate and making it, within the limits set by latitude, such as suits his convenience, he will, in time, accomplish what he wishes to do. It is not improbable that some year in the century which is now almost upon us will see the end, at least over a considerable part of the earth's surface, of destructive storms, of unseasonable drought of untimely or excessive rain.

NO INDIAN LUNATICS.

NO INDIAN LUNATICS.

[Pittsburgh Dispatch:] A full-blooded Indian lunatic never lived, according to United States Commissioner William A. Jones, of the Department of Indian Affairs. The statement was surprising, inasmuch as the Commissioner had just finished inspecting the site recently purchased by the government near Canton, I. T., for an Indian insane asylum. Mr. Jones said:

"The occupants of the hospital soon to be opened will all be mixed breeds. Even among them the number of patients is small in proportion to the Indian population of 256,000. The exact number I do not know. Probably there never was a case of insanity in any tribe until the malady was introduced by mixing with the whites. Oddly enough, diseases of all kinds are creating the greatest havoc among the best-cared-for and richest tribes. Those who have to rustle for themselves are gradually increasing in numbers.

"Among the Osages, in Oklahoma, for example, the death rate is something startling. The nation comprises 16,000 Indians, and has $9,000,000 to its credit, drawing interest, in the United States treasury. The reds live in nothing short of luxury, but early in life the braves grow fat and flabby, then contract consumption and die. The Sioux, numbering about twenty thousand, are on the increase. They have no such nest-legg as the Osages, and have to work harder for their livings. It agrees with them."

EMERALDS IN RUSSIA.

A St. Petersburg newspaper says: "Emeralds, some of which are very fine, are found in the district of Ekaterinburg, along the banks of the Tokova River, about thirty-two miles from the capital of the district. Mining for this precious stone began in 1841, and at the beginning group very good results. The first emerald beginning gave very good results. The first emerald was found by a peasant named Maxim Kajevnikow, in 1839, while he was examining the roots of a tree which had been uprooted by a storm. It is pretty certain, however, that discoveries of the same kind had already been made in 1838. It is even possible that finds had been made prior to then, as the Czar Boris Godounow presented the Venetian engraver, Francis Ascentini, with a sable fur and 100 dueats for having out a large been made prior to then, as the CZar Boris Godoulow presented the Venetian engraver, Francis Ascentini, with a sable fur and 100 ducats for having cut a large emerald for a ring.

"The finest emeralds were found when these stones were being mined for the account of the government. During this period, that is, up to 1862, 5600 pounds were extracted. The government afterward farmed out he mines to private parties, who were not successful. The emeralds of superior quality have been found near the surface of the soil, while those found in deep ground were inferior quality."

She had lived there in retirement many years, and her name remained only a pleasant memory to the old-school reading public. WOMAN AND HOME.

THE COSTUME OF CONDOLENCE,

COUNTESS OF STRAFFORD HAS INDORSED ITS SOMBER SPLENDOR BY WEARING ONE.

[BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

The proverbial ill-wind brings us the profit at last of seeing all the fashionable devices for dressing in the coolest possible fashion. The woman in mourning, who has the most difficult problem to deal with, commands has the most difficult problem to dear with, commands first admiration, so artfully and becomingly does she accommodate herself to the demands of the weather. Black, lusteriess crepe de chine, black straight-thread grenadine, blick liberty silk and coal-black French linen lawn and tailors' lien are the shadowy fabrics in which the bereaved find some solace. The usual scheme of the gown that signifies full mourning is to face the foundation skirt to the knees with an almost perfectly-flat, circular flounce of the typical weed of grief, that is to say, English crepe, and then drop upon this an overskirt-like drapery of one of the cool, gauzy weaves. None of the hot, heavy crepe is considered essential on the waist, and the hat or bonnet is of wired crepe or Brussels net.

If a bonnet is insisted upon, only a scarf of net, hemmed or faced with a crepe border, two to four inches wide, depends from the bonnet's rear. The mourning head piece itself is scarcely larger than a man's palm, and has a brim folding back like a diadem close against the crown. All this, whether the crown sits flat to the head or rises in the form of a small syinder with a rather flaring top, is pinned well back on the head, and any trimming is done by the abundance of the falling scarf that often sprouts in a big, crepy pon-pon to one side of the head. first admiration, so artfully and becomingly does she

The best investment for a cool, serviceable, wash, mourning costume is a perfectly plain black India Silk. This is a silk woven in France and sent to India for its dye and finish, and guaranteed to stand travel, rain or long usage with a staunchiness beyond compare. It must be made on a taffeta or one of the crisp imitationsilk goods to get the nicest wearing results, but for women of all ages it is one of the few goods that never disappoints.

Far less reliable for stiff device, but most beautiful of the mourning fabrics, is the black net to which is applied large flowers and ornate patterns cut from true mourning crepe. This is to the woman in mourning what a spaigled or embroidered net is to the butterfly of fishion, and the airy thing is called the Empress Elizabeth, since it was first evolved, for the wear at state functions, for ladies of the Austrian court, after the death of the beautiful wife of Franz Joseph. Shaped skirts and jackets of this are made like the lace yowns. the death of the beautiful wife of Franz Joseph. Snaped skirts and jackets of this are made, like the lace gowns so much in evidence, to drop over mourning silk slips on a finish of swirling chiffon flounces. For two of our exceedingly-wealthy American widows, Venetian drossmakers have built superb condolence costumes of net over silk, garnished with sprays of creps, applied with rows and clusters of imitation ash pearls.

Indorsed By the Countess of Stafford.

The condolence costume, by the way, is a wardrohe feature since the Countes of Strafford wisely introduced it in London. It is a toilet of somber splendor, worn for the reception of those beief, painful calls succeeding a funeral. Awidow is apt to wear on such an occasion a tiny, pointed cap of white lisse, with lisse streamer to her heels, if her hair is gray; otherwise, her hair is arranged very simply, parted from crown to bow, and the fullness drawn back in a soft, bandeau effect at either side of head.

The tuck and the herring-bone are locked in a deadly struggle for supremacy. Appearances are in favor of the herring-bone, though the tuck stands almost as strong in favor as ever. It is, however, quite impossible to buy a decorative silk, crepe or muslin that its length is not freeted at intervals of a very few inches with the silk criss-cross hat machinery has been per-stible to buy a decorative silk, crepe or muslin that its length is not freeted at intervals of a very few inches with the silk criss-cross hat machinery has been perfected to introduce.

By means of the herring-bone lines all the smartest silk bodies show their linings to bright effect, the hems are set on with herring-bone headings, and the swan song of the looms this spring was the voile and grenadine, the organdie and gingham, made open-worked and lace-like by dint of a herring-bone pattern. All sweetly herring-boned, at the head of their hems are our new neckties, whether of soft silk, in cashmere pattern, or of silk muslin, and into such proportions has the neckwear trade crept that it has guaranteed the opening of little shops where only collars, bows and sallor knots are sold.

The Ascot, that is not more than a smart bandanna silk handkerchief arranged to draw into a tidy four-inhand, undoubtedly leads the way, but a rising star is the automobile of black satin, powdered with crimson sparks and drawn at the neck in a four-in-hand knot, again at the bust in a sailor's knot, and then it secures its two lone ends in the wearer's belt. Only when on exercise bent does the shirt-waist-clad woman wear a pique, cheviot or gingham stock. If purely pastoral or passive pleasures call her forth she circles her pretty throat with a stiff neck-band, overlaid with organdie, or chiffon, in tucks and ruches, and a snowy jabot, in the form of a complicated bow or a series of overlapping flounces, depending like the ruffs of a pointer pigeon upon her breast. Somewhere in this maze of prettiness she places her pearl necktie pin. Three pearls, set like a three-leafed clover, one gem pink, one yellow, and one ash, gray or white is the rule, and since pretty imitation pearls serve as well as the true ones, this is a fashion essentially within the reach of the majority.

Surrounded by a band of intensely black, bright enamel constitues a Rajah setting hat shows off the rich gem of the stone to wonderful advantage, and the acme of smartness this summer is to wear gloves as little as possible, to wear rings not at all by day, but at night to put on the tanned fingers as many splendid diamonds, emeralds and turquoise as they can comfortably wear.

CURLY HAIR AND HAPPINESS,

THE VIRTUES OF WHITE OF EGG AND WATER AS A CURL PRESERVER.

[BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

"Happiness is, at last, mine," said enthusiastically a summer girl whose hair was most beautifully coiffed and covered her head in the large, even, Semitic waves that are usually regarded as so inimitable.

"And why so," inquired her friend, whose hair bore the subtle stamp of nature's twisting.

"Because I have found a way to keep my hair in curl," she answered, joyfully. "The densest sea fogs and the humid, summer air of the mountains have become alike indifferent to me. I laugh at them both. Then it is so simple," she continued, gleefully, "I take the white part of an egg and dilute it one-third with water, and place it in an air-tight jar, where it will remain fresh for one week. At night, I saturate a comb with this mixture and pass it through my hair until it is well moistened; then I divide it into strands and wrap it around on long kids. This must not, however, be done carelessly, or the hair will eventually present a jumbled, crinkled appearance, very different from the symmetrical waves which are to be desired. Herein lies another secret. Each strand must be as rightly twisted as a cord before it is wrapped around the kid. In this way the waves are induced to form of the same size, and to follow an unbroken line across the head. About six kids, four for the front and sides and two for the back hair, are the number that are used to give an all-over curled effect. The remainder of the hair, that about the crown of the head, is what is taken up and arranged in the knot on the top of the head.

When in the morning the hair is combed out it will. take the white part of an egg and dilute it one-third

When, in the morning, the hair is combed out, it will appear to have increased doubly in quantity, owing to the application of the white of the egg and water, and will be found to possess a stability and firmness which has hitherto been unknown to it. Each hair stands out away from the head, and in texture is very similar to that which curls naturally. If managed properly no trace of the white of egg is to be seen. During ordinarily warm weather, even though the head is apt to

FROM LONGCHAMP RACES.

The slender women of today, following the fashion as decreed by the French contourier's, could verily slip through needle eyes or come unrumpled through large wedding rings, so close to their supple bodies are their delicate garments adjusted. From the famous Longchamp races the special artist, an associate of the famous Sandoy, sends a study of a remarkable and typical dress. It is particularly significant of the daring extreme to which Paris dressmakers fearlessly push the mode, and of the growing favor of green on the other side of the water. Aqua-marine green is the color of the two taffets mousseline pleatings at the foot. The same tint shows through the front panel of cream Malta lace, and the drap de Paris redingote is of this same clear sea-water green. their delicate garments adjusted. A NEGLIGEE COSTUME

A white negligeo is the bright particular dream of woman who is able to realize that in the cloudy folds of snowy lace and lawn not only does she feel but appear to the happiest advantage. She surely goes contrary to the laws of her sex and the season who could not make an effective tableau of herself in this lovely and lovable volante caught by the camera. perspire, this performance need only to be gone through with every third or fourth night.

"Even so," the girl with the curly hair resumed, "you take an immense amount of trouble to change the character of your hair, and to me its straightness is extremely attractive."

"That is because your own hair is curly," her friend rejoined. "It is always so. As for me, I agree with the ancients, and think straight hair a mark of God's displeasure. Perhaps those that are content to wear it in a style which is adapted to its severe lines think differently, but once having become identified with curly hair it is too dreadful to have it, as the saying is, 'come out.' I speak feelingly, for I have had some woeful experiences. Fancy, for instance, starting off, immaculately gowned and with your hair beautifully ourled, on a yacht with a lot of gay people. Naturally you have provided yoursef with three or four vells, but what are they to the fog and stiff breeze that await you? Soon, to the astonishment of your former admirers, your hair begins to fall in a mournful, drooping fringe from under your jaunty cap. With it, your spirits inevitably fall, and the day for you is over. It has been a complete denouement. There are a few of us, I fancy, that enjoy a bland feeling of contentment unless our hair is properly curled. You know, even, "Venus oft with anxious care Adjusted twice a singe hair."

'Venus oft with anxious care Adjusted twice a single hair."

A NATIONAL NURSES' AID SOCIETY.

[BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

In the United States there are between 15,000 and 20,000 trained nurses. No insurance society will issue sick-benefit policies to nurses on account of the great risks to which they ae exposed by their vocation.

The average earnings of the trained nurse is between $600 and $800 a year. The average salary is $25 a week, but they are not always engaged. A majority of there nurses have some one dependent upon them, these nurses have some one dependent upon them, and consequently there are few who are able to save much for old age or the "rainy day." After the lapse of twenty-five years of faithful service, the trained nurses of America are about to follow the example set in England, where there is a-mutual benefit society and a pension fund for the superannuated trained nurse, of which society the Princess Christian is the patroness and founder. And now the United States is to have a similar organization; for on the 22d of March, 1899, Gov. Theodore Roosevelt of New York affixed his signature to a bill authorizing the formation, and describing the government of "The Trained Nurses" United Ari Society of America." which last is the logical-sequence of "The Metropolitan Trained Nurses' Club" of New York.

Nurses in other cities, and nearby States, saw the advantages of belonging to this club, and applied for admittance. A few more were taken in, but finally

A YOUTHFUL MIDDY.

Very small men are put early for the summer season into their seaside flannels, and the shy little middy in the picture displays to the most alluring advantage the charm and comforts of the baby togs. Any mother who has a golden-haired boy to deck for the envious admiration of all the other seaside mothers, could hardly do better than to array him as one of these. With the long blouse and full trousers a tiny chappie seems in the transition state between his kilt and the breeches to come, and man-like as is the suggestion of his attire, it is none the less sweet and essentially babyish, therefore just what it should be. White flannel is naturally the chief ingredient of this jolly little suit; the sallor tie is cream-white wash silk and the belt of wash leather with a brass buckle. Very small men are put early for the summer season

The object of the Trained Nurses' United Society is the relief of trained nurses who are laid by from duty on account of illness or accident, and the payment of funeral benefits in the case of death.

It is not in any way, shape or form a charity, but a mutual benefit insurance society. If they subsequently obtain an endowed bed or a room in a hospital, and a sick member of the society has to go there, she does not go as a charity patient, called upon to be thankful; she goes there getting only what she has paid for.

Her membership fee and monthly dues have been received by the managers of the society, and invested for fier to meet the demands of just such dark days. Nor is she under any obligation to the society iself. She has paid for all the benefits she will ever receive.

FOR A CHILD UNDER TWELVE YEARS.

White has become almost universal for children under 12 years of age, especially for summer wear; little girls particularly dance in white, play in white and swim in white flannel. Another good and healthy indication is a growing taste for keeping little girls as much as possible in low-necked and short-sleeved dresses. The strong lungs, full, white throats and well-developed arms of one grandmothers was chiefly the dresses. The strong lungs, full, white throats and well-developed arms of our grandmothers was chiefly the result of their décoleté costumes, in winter as well as summer, when they were little ones; and the mothers of today are awaking to the fact that there is no developer for small constitutions like good, clean, fresh air. Our little miss in the picture wears a summer afternoon dress of white French lawn, her skirt cut to do away with all fullness at the belt and her low neck, short-sleeved body is adorned only with a design in crisp white Swiss muslin ruchings. A hat of cream Tuscan straw, veiled and heaped with white silk muslin, crowns the small fairy, who looks quite cool and fresh enough to serve as a model for a summer breeze.

At present they agree to provide $5 per week for six weeks in any one year in case of sickness prior to the age of 65, together with $59 at death. It is hoped that when members do not ask for any benefit during five years, that a somewhat larger sum can be given in case of need during the subsequent five years.

Any one interested in trained nurses may become an associate member (non-participating.) A life membership costs $100.

The society had no precedents upon which to base its present estimate of monthly dues. In consequence of this it is possible that a trial may force them to be raised. On the other hand, if they are found more than adequate, the society will be able to grant larger benefits than those promised.

STYLES FOR MEN.

WHAT IS CORRECT IN THE WAY OF CLOTHING FOR MIDSUMMER.

[BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

For the dog days and lounging at home, loose silk coats are beyond all dispute the coolest and the most presentable negligée jackets posible. Ribbed Japanese silk, that will wash like a teacup, makes a coat that is wondrously comfortable when the thermometer is establishing a record every minute. These coats are made up on this side of the water or come from the hands of Japanese tailor, taught the art of them by English-men out in the East, who give a deal of attention to dressing with reference to the climate. The silks they are cut from are usually in light summery tint, and the shape of the garment is that of the long-tried and never-found-wanting blazer.

French Bathing Clothes.

Last season a manufacturer bethought himself seriously of the incongruous appearance of his sex on the fashionable beaches, and tried to push a suit made of a fashionable beaches, and tried to push a suit made of a stiff green-and-white-striped goods that more nearly resembled bed ticking than anything else in quality, and no man could justifiably bring himself to the point of wearing it. At one or two places this season have been seen what are called French bathing clothes. They show points worth adoption.

The elastic dark-blue breeches are met at the knee by rough-wool, long hose, that, like those of the eighteenth century, roll up over the knee and curis back to cover the elastic circles necessary for keeping them in place. Some distance below the hips falls a tunic of rough, dark-blue flannel, short sleeved, with a smallish collar rolling away from a vest of stripes

The Brown Straw Bowler.

The straw-hat season came in without a flourish and few novelties. Over in England they have been trying to introduce a brown straw "bowler," as the Britisher fondly terms his derby. The straw bowler is far cooler fondly terms his derby. The straw bowler is far cooler than the flat sailor, with its nearly air-tight crown, to which we cling on this side, and perhaps if the Prince of Wales would consent to crown his royal head with a comfortable dome of cigar-colored straw men on two sides of the Atlantic would follow his cue.

Around about the summer resorts the fishing, cycling, driving contingent of the male population seem to prefer their very light-weight pearl-gray Alpines to the new, smart, Japanese-cane sailors, that seem the one venture the manufacturers have attempted in deviation from the conventional tough, yellow, skimming-dish affair.

Many of the straw hats have their crown belts of black gros-grained silk drawn at the side through perfectly flat, black-enamel slides, and a considerable showing has been made of the blue-banded cream straws and caps that are shaped exactly like the German flat cap. The crowns of these last are done out of cream flannel, the broad varnished visor comes well over the eyes, but such a covering is rather intolerably hot for our summer suns. our summer suns.

Correct Height for Collars.

Correct Height for Colines.

Two and a half inches is the lawful height for collars, though men with long necks are entitled to linen bands 2¾ inches high. Against short-necked men this collar ruling goes hardly, especially when evening dress is worn, for then the collar must stand up quite straight, measude a trifle deeper in front than at the rear, and the points under the chin can be pressed out and apart ever so little. Double collars, with round points, have, for all save evening hours, pushed the single band out of usage. Men even dress for afternoon weddings in double collars, wearing them usually at weddings with waterfall ties of soft silk in two stripes, and those dark and white, most often.

Everybody is buying and wearing a quaint, little-stock evening tie that is one of the most unreasonable small noveltics ever brought out. It is made of white lawn of the sheerest dimity, long enough to pass twice around the neck and a half inch wider at the middle than at any other point. There is a buton hole in the center of this widest portion, and that is midde fast to the front collar stud. The ends are thrown back, crossed at the rear, brought forward and drawn in front into the typical evening bow. Of course, this folding and refolding of even the finest lawn gives the neck a bulky appearance, but the argument is that by such an intricate device the tie is withheld from ever slipping up or, even in moments of intenest excitement, from vanishing under the wearer's ear, since necktie from vanishing under the wearer's ear, since necktie side pins have proven but an abomination to men who have tested their possible good offices.

The invention that brought him most fame is an interferometer, which not only measures light waves, but counts the waves.

MAGOG'S PECUL'AR AND USEFUL POSITION AS RAT CATCHER AND HOUSEHOLD PROTECTOR.

When Ralph was sent out to learn the intricacies of the coffee-planting business in Ceylon, years ago, he was duly grateful to his guardians for finding a career for him, but was slightly dubious himself as to whether he would care much for that sort of thing. On learning that he had to go to the far-away English colony, he studied books about the place and read of panthers, he studied books about the place and read of panthers, elephants, elk and snakes living in profusion there, he felt somewhat alarming, being, you know, merely a harmless, studicus youth of some 17 years old, who had not the slightest desire to kill an elephant so long as the elephant did not want to kill him.

Ralph read of cobras and tie-polongas and other venomous snakes of the island, until he was scared, and, by the time his periadore (or manager) had installed him in the little bamboothatched bungalow which he was to call his own, he was in such a state that if you had trailed a whiplash suddenly before his unsuspecting gaze he that if you had trailed a whiplash suddenly before his unsuspecting gaze he would have gone into hysterics.

Ralph had one particular servant, whom he had to engage and pay himself—De Silva, a Cingalese. The other help came from the coolie lines of the estate, and, after their day's work, used to retire to their huts. When dinner in the evening was over, De Silva used to retire also. Where he retired to Ralph never inquired. Indian servants have a way of disappearing and turning up again which would puzzle a conjurer. There was a kitchen and outhouse separate from the bungalow, and, for all Ralph knew, De Silva, after salaaming and gaying "Goonye, after salaaming and saying "Goonye, honorable sir," went away to sleep on top of the kitchen range.

At any rate, after the day's work was done, unless he was invited to dine with the periadore, Ralph was utterly alone, with no white man nearer than the big bungalow, a mile and a half away, down the mountain. It is an awful, horrible way to be left, as Ralph was fresh from home and as Ralph was, fresh from home and mother and sisters. He used to sit and try to read the magazines sent to him, and his books, but the terrible silence and his books, but the terrible stence of the mountains—welcome to an older man—frightened him. That silence would be broken sometimes by a furious tom-tom orgie at the huts of the coolies, or the long wail of a native woman, mourning her dead child, or again by a sudden tropical thunderstorm, with such crashes of thunder echoing among the mountains, and such torrents of rain as filled the boy's timid soul with terror.

It was in the midst of one such storm, when the reading lamp was low, storm, when the reading lamp was low, and it was near midnight, that Ralph, longing for a companion, for some one to talk to, looked up and saw Magog. Ralph gave one tremendous how and rushed out, through the back door, to seek De Silva. De Silva was placidly asleep on the couch he had chosen for that night—a shelf just, one would think, broad enough for the crockery it was intended to hold. Still, De Silva looked comfortable.

"A coptabl" yelled Ralph mulling the cook down on "A'cobra!" yelled Ralph, pulling the cook down on the floor without regard to his feelings. "A cobra! A snake!. A serpent! A monster!"

"Where?" cried De Silva, jumping on a chair.

"In the sitting-room, hanging halfway down the wall!
It hangs from the ceiting cloth" (In old bungalows whitewashed canvas, often cracking at the walls, is stretched beneath the rafters, and looks just like an ordinary ceiling) "and was coming at me!"

De Silva looked at Ralph repreachfully, and at his ore great, but tiful, much-to-be-caressed ratsnake, Magog."

So De Silva went with his young master into the bungalow and introduced him to Magog—the snake. Magog hung just as Ralph has described him, half-way down the wall, a great, fat, black snake, with quiet, steady, watchful eyes on the room. It hung ready, at a flash of dread, to draw itself up above the ceiling cloth and disappear in its lair there beneath the bamboo thatch, where it hunted the rats, which fought with it for a home.

"No, Magog," said De Silva, explaining, "then too many rats and mice."
In fact, Magog was the house cat.
De Silva took a saucer and filled it with cocoanut milk, and placed it on the floor in Magog's corner. Ralph shuddered when he saw the reptile slither to the ground, evidently feeling quite secure, and suck up the milk. De Silva smiled.

"Wait, honorable sir," said he, "and I will, with your honorable favor, bring him a dinner. It may be that the gods have not seen fit to give him rats."

honorable favor, bring him a dinner. It may be that the gods have not seen fit to give him rats."

He left Ralph alone, shuddering at his proximity to the big snake. It was a monster for a ratsnake, quite five feet in length, and thick as Ralph's arm, and, though Ralph knew that ratsnakes were not venomous, he felt far from happy at being alone with it.

The cook came back with a little, squirming puppy, its averant vet onen.

The cook came back with a little snake had already the snake had already darted for the little beast, swallowed it, gorged ft. Ralph could see its undulous body distend.

"Kill it—kill it!" Ralph cried, and De Silva looked at him with extreme sorrow and some contempt.

"No, dore," said he, "it was my last honorable dore's treasure. The honorable sir said it was the luck of the bungalow—I say right in English? Yes? The luck of the bungalow. It was his treasure. Do not kill it."

The snake lapped up the rest of the milk, and in a twinkling slithered away again. De Silva went back to his shelf, and Raiph went to bed. But he could not sleep. Above his head that night and every night he could hear the scamper of rats on the ceiling cloth, and after them the rush of the snake, and then a faint, forforn squeak, and he knew that Magog was doing his duty as a colonial house cat. The snake may have been doing his duty, but Ralph could not bear the thought of its nearness. He tried to conquer the feeling, but he couldn't.

Poor Magog, used to being petted by its last master, would peer out from the ceiling cloth for hours in the evening, while Ralph was trying to read, and Ralph would look up from his books, and see its black head and quiet, watchful eyes and be horrified. Between its noise by night in the roof and its presence in the evening. Ralph grew so nervous that, in spite of De Silva's warning and wishes, he tried to kill the snake. He sat one evening at his table with a revolver in hand, and, when Magog appeared as usual, he took fair aim and fired. The bullet went into the wall; Magog withdred like a flash. De Silva came rushing.
"I think I hit the bruts," said Ralph, and pointed to a spot of blood on the whitewashed wall.
"Oh, honorable dore," said De Silva, superstitious as his kind, "it was the luck of the bungalow—say I it

bungalow."

And he went away to his kitchen a-sorrowing, but Ralph felt as if he had done a good deed, and rid the world of a hideosity.

No more came Magog to plague the young sinnadore. For many nights the rats scampered over the ceiling cloth without any pursuer. Ralph, in his lonely evenings, looked at the vacant crack, and congratulated himself.

ings, looked at the vacant crack, and congratulated himself,
"I must have killed the horrid brute," said he, "and a good job, too. Probably the rats avenged themselves by eating him."

So the young sinnadore rested, and told, when he was at the periadore's bungalow for dinner, how he had made a marvelousy good shot at the snake, and ridded himself of an intolerable nuisance.

"You oughtn't to have done that," said the periadore," smoking his cheroot and smilling upon the boy.
"Why not?" I hate snakes—I abhor them."

"Maybe, but they have their uses," said the periadore.
"I'll kill a cobra or tic-polonga quick as anybody, but I would not kill a harmless ratsnake, which is poisonless, and which, my lad, has been cleaning out the rats and mice from your bungalow for years. To put it mildly, it was not only cruel, but a mistake. Marigold, your predecessor, cherished old Magog. He used to tell me the brute was boss of the house, and that, if Magog were not there, the rats would make his life not worth fliving."

"Yes, but the beast was so familiar—coming out at

"Yes, but the beast was so familiar—coming out at dinner to hang there—asking for milk—ugh!"
"All right, old chap," said the periadore, "it's your bungalow, not mine."

Within a week of the night when Ralph shot at the snake, there came one of those tumultuous rainstorms which are never seen anywhere except in the tropical rainy seasons. It is a mistake to try to picture in words one of these storms. You read of them often, but, if one of these storms. You read of them often, but, if you have not been through one, you never could imagine its horrors. Try to picture to yourself the day of judgment, with the whole heavens tumbling in, like a falling roof, on top of you, with all the navies of the world firing turret guns at you, with all the lightning of the skies concentrating upon you, with not a soul, white or black, near you, without a single tongue to cry "Here!" when your tongue cries "Help!" without a hand to reach out to touch yours—try and picture yourself a scene like that, and you have some idea of the roaring tempest in which Ralph, one lonely night in his bungalow on the mountain, went to bed and slept—slept, utterly tired out from working up the mountain with the periadore and the coolies to strengthen the

Ralph's bedroom was off the sitting-room, under the same ceiling cloth, and his bed lay close to the wall. He was utterly tired, but he dreamed, and in his dream somehow Magog the snake was mixed up. He dreamed the snake was following him revengefully; he dreamed it came up to him, running; he dreamed it caught him; he dreamed that he fell down; he dreamed that the snake coiled and struck at his chest. He woke up with the yell of nightmare—half choked, horrible. And it was true! As he awoke, Magog, the great snake, dropped from the ceiling, fell on him, and swiftly glided away out of the door.

Ralph was on his feet instantly, and found himself drenched in perspiration. For a moment he could not understand. Then, above the noise of the thunder, above the crash of the rain, he heard another sound. He heard the roar of released waters, the roar of great rocks and tons of earth coming slipping, sliding, dashing down the mountain—a landslide! And Ralph knew that his bungalow was right in the path of the escaped waters.

He was out of the place in his pajamas just in time that his bungatow was right in his pajamas just in time waters.

He was out of the place in his pajamas just in time to reach high land and see his bungalow swept away. De Silva stood beside him, shivering and praying.

"Ah, honorable sir," said De Silva. "I told you, you killed the luck of the bungalow; Magog, the snake."

"I did not," cried the trembling boy. "It lived and warned me, or I should be dead now."

[BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

"Mardo" is the name of a great Dane dog whose specialty is taking the conceit out of the king of beasts. He is owned by Col. S. A. Stephan, superintendent of the Zoölogical Society of Cincinnati, and has been trained to watch the wild animals in the gardens of the society. During periodical carnivals in dens of the society. During periodical carnivals in which the gentler of the beasts are allowed a certain amount of liberty, Mardo keeps them in place very much as a shepherd dog does his sheep.

The latest exploit of the grent Dane was to attack a lion that had turned on its keeper, get a strangle hold on the back of the lion's neck, and maltreat it so that the beast whined for mercy, and when released went to its cage with the air of a whipped cur. In describing the occurrence, Col. Stephan writes:

"One of the keepers had been breaking the lion to be led by a chain, and had so far succeeded in training him that he believed he could give him a little outing in the large building where we had him caged. When he went to the cage to try the experiment, the keeper saw that the lion had a sulky fit, but, having set his heart on testing the progress he had made with the big brute, did what afterward turned out to be a foolish thing, he ignored the lion's sulks and led him out by the chain. He, fortunately, had the wisdom to call the dog Mardo, and tell him to follow while the lion took his lesson.

his lesson.

The lion feigned to come out of his sulky fit when ho saw Mardo, and walked very docilely along for a distance of about seventy-five feet, when quick as a flash he turned on the keeper and knocked him down. In a few seconds there would have been a tragedy, but Mardo went at the lion like a demon, and his majesty of the ferest soon found that he had his teeth and claws full of dog, and no time to carry out his designs on the become.

"Mardo jumped on the back of the lion, caught him in the back of the neck, and in vain did the lion try to shake off the dog. The latter had a grip that defled all bucking on the part of the under animal, and all the all bucking on the part of the under animal, and all the time he was chewing away at the neck of the king of beasts until the mane of the lion was dyed red with blood and the beast half frantic with rage and his inability to get at the dog.

"At last the lion fairly gave in. Lying down, he whined for mercy, and the keeper, seeing that he was thoroughly cowed, called the dog off. Mardo came down with evident reluctance, and was with difficulty restrained from trying a second fall with the lion, which by this time was an abject object of pity, as meek as a lamb, and evidently ready to run at the slightest sign on Mardo's part of a disposition to renew the attack. The lion returned quietly to his cage, and has since taken his exercise at the end of the chain with no more appearance of fight than is found in a house cat of domestic habits."

Mardo is not quite 2 years old, is 33 inches in height, and in weight about one hundred and thirty-five pounds. He is probably the only dog in the world who met a lion in fair fight and whipped him into submission.

LUCY AND THE BAT.

SHE COULD FACE JUNE BUGS, MICE, SNAKES AND EVEN CATEPILLARS, BUT NOT BATS. IBY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

If there was anything in the world that Miss Lucy was afraid of, it was a bat. Mice, June bugs, snakes, and even big, green caterpillars, she could look upon unmoved, but bats "set her nerves on edge," as she feelingly expressed it. It was one summer evening, after an en-counter with one of these monsters in the drawingcounter with one of these monsters in the drawing-room, that Miss Lucy retired to her apartment for the night, much shaken as to nerves. The room still retained the somewhat chaotic traces of her carefully-made toilet of the early evening. She refrained from lighting the gas, lest it should attract the attention of her dreaded enemies, the bats, and determined to prepare for bed by the dim light that stole through the transom from the hall. She had scarcely begun to take down her hair, when a sight met her eyes that froze her very soul with terror. There, upon the bed, lay the dark, hated form of a bat! Miss Lucy did not scream, she merely stood transfixed, straining her eyes to catch by the faint light some movement on the part of the "horrid creature." What if it should fly! Fly—and bury its talons in her heavy hair! She shuddered. to catch by the faint light some movement on the part of the "horrid creature." What if it should fly! Fly—and bury its talons in her heavy hair! She shuddered. Then, with a courage born of desperation, she seized a fluffy shawl that lay on a chair near by and advanced toward the bed. The bat lay motionless. Nearer and nearer she crept; and at last, with a terrified energy, flung the shawl over the creature, winding it about and about, until she thought she had it safe. How horribly it squirmed and fluttered under the folds of the shawl! But she held it firm and bore it to the window with a wildly beating heart, flung the whole mass down into the garden below and closed the sash with a bang. It was the gardener, who, while working in the shrubbery next day, found a fluffy shawl wound tightly about a black satin slipper. Both belonged to Miss Lucy. She says she never dons either, without thinking of bats.

GRATITUDE SHOWN BY A FISH.

[BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

A gentleman, walking one evening in the park at Durham, the seat of the Earl of Stamford and Warrington, came to a pond where fish intended for the table were temporarily kept. He took particular notice of a fine pike, of about six pounds weight, which, when it observed him, darted hastily away. In so doing it struck its head against a tenter-hook in a port (of which there were several in the pond, placed to prevent poaching,) and, as it afterward appeared, fractured its skull, thereby turning the optic nerve on one

The anguish evinced by the fish appeared most horrible. It rushed to the bottom, and boring its head into the mud, whirled itself around with such velocity that it was almost lost to sight for a short interval. It then plunged about the pond, and at length threw itself completely out of the water onto the bank.

The doctor caught the fish, and upon examination found that a very small portion of the brain was protuding from the fracture in the skull. He carefully replaced this, and with a small silver toothpick raised the indented portion of the skull. The fish remained still for a short time, and he then put it again into the pond.

It appeared at first a good deal relieved, but in a few minutes it again darted and plunged about until it threw itself out of the water a second time. A second time the gentleman did what he could to relieve it, and again put it into the water. The pike continued for several times to throw itself out of the pond, and with the assistance of the keeper, the doctor at length made a kind of trepan for the fish, which was then left in the pond to its fate.

Upon making an appearance at the pond the follow-

Upon making an appearance at the pond the following morning, the pike came to the edge of the water and actually laid its head upon the physician's foot. The doctor thought this most extraordinary; but he examined the fish's skull, and found it going on all right. He then walked backward and forward along the edge of the pond for some time, and the fish continued to swim up and down, turning whenever he turned; but being blind on the wounded side of its skull, it always appeared agitated when it had that side toward the bank, as it could not then see its benefactor.

Next day the doctor took some young friends down to see the fish, which came to him as before, and at length he actually taught the pike to come to him at his whistle and feed out of his hands. With other persons it continued as shy as fish usually are.

This was a most remarkable case of gratitude in a

THE FEET ARE NERVE CENTERS.

NARROW SHOES AT THE BOTTOM OF WOMEN'S TEARS AND EARLY GRAY HAIRS.

[BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

There is a woman in New York City who earns her support as a pedologist; that is, she goes from house to house giving treatment to women who have troublesome feet. Of course, she does for her patients all that the most skilled chiropodist can do, but her specialty and far more profitable science is devoted to treating the feet as an aid in restoring nervous strength.

If she had her own way, this enthusiastic pedologist says she would try to persuade all women to go without shoes entirely, wear sandals or Chinese slippers the year round, and thereby she believes statistics in nervous diseases would promptly show a marked fall-nervous diseases would promptly show a marked falinervous diseases would promptly show a marked falinerous off.

"Hot, narrow-soled, toe-pinching, high-buttoned and laced shoes are at the bottom of one-half the wrinkles, tears, tempers and early gray hair in this country, at least," was her assertion, "and my whole mission in life is to bring light and liberty to the American foot, for I've found by investigation that where a race that goes barefoot or that wears sandals knows nothing of nervous afflictions.

"The healthy, comfortable foot is always as free to expand as the hand, as free to the air and the toes nearly as sensitive, important and well-developed as the fingers. That is the foot of the East Indian woman, for example, who will reach out and pick a needle from the floor with her toes, or with her left foot on her right knee hold the end of a long hem between her great and second toe and sew away with the ease of a creature owning twenty instead of ten fingers.

Take her foot into your hands and you will find it as strong, warm and prehensile as a human hand; well, that is what our women's feet should be like, but short of the bound foot of the Chinese, I know no more deplorable object than the average small or large feminine foot I am called in to treat.

"You see, my mission is particularly to nervous women. I've a list of patients as long as my arm to whom I give foot massage and I can almost guarantee to smooth out half the neurasthenic tantrums by stripping the poor maimed feet of their coverings and rubbing gently and regularly up and down, back and forth on the soles where so many important nerves, blood vessels and muscles lie. After this, I persuade the patient to give her feet fresh air daily, sun baths, if she can get them, and then I struggle with the shoe problem.

I explain the meaning and importance of those sole nerves, that might be truthfully written soul nerves, that are almost the most sensitive in the body that are wracked and tortured by the hot, jarred joints, crushed nails, corninfested toes, and, worst of all, by being crushed to gether to fit a shoe bottom that is only one-half as wide as the foot itself. It is a powerful argument when I show a woman her naked foot in all its objectionable, ghastly pallor, swelled veins and red knobs and ask her if she thinks she would bear the pain subjecting her hand to a vise that could reduce it to such a state of anguished ugliness.

"She is not apt to doubt my word when I prove that her bodily fatigue, the wrinkles between her eyebrows and her hop-and-go-fetch-it gait are all the result of her valiant efforts to steer herself along and ease the pressure as much as possible on her tightly-clenched feet that have neither air nor swift circulation of blood, and yet on them is cast all the weight and work of the body.

"Some women know by instinct how nearly the nerves of the feet are related to the nerves of their hearts, stomachs and brains, and Mme. Calvé is one of them. When anxiety and hard work press upon her she puts off slippers and stockings. Letting her feet breathe is what she calls sitting a long hour wriggling her pink toes delightedly in the sun or running up and down the rooms to stretch the soles. After this she lies down and has her maid gently chafe the bottoms of her feet till she drops into a deep sleep, whence she comes soothed and vigorous for any amount of work. "Just try taking your feet out of a jail some day when the world is too much with you," concluded the little woman, "and if in the end you are not a convert to pedology, then all I can say is your feet have been mangled beyond redemption."

The advance sheets for Bernard Shaw's "Antony and Cleopatra," in which the enchantress of the Nile is a sixteen-year-old girl and Caesar is a man of 56 years, have been given out, showing that the witty and egotistical author has contrived a plot that is decidedly at variance with the stories told by Shakespeare and Sardou. All in all, it is claimed that if this newest Cleopatra is ever produced it will prove about the oddest thing that Shaw has yet written, and he is famous for the unconventional manner in which he does everything.

GOVERNMENTS OF THE WORLD OF TODAY.

VIII.-ITALY.

BY FREDERIC W. SPEIRS, PH.D.

Early History.

S a geographical division upon the map, Italy is one of the oldest countries of Europe; as unified nation it is one of the newest. The present kingdom of Italy, which now figures as one of the great powers of Europe, is less than a generation old.

At the beginning of the Christan era Italy was the At the beginning of the Christan era Italy was the political center of the world. From the Eternal City radiated the power which ruled civilization. But Rome fell before the attacks of the barbarians in 476 A. D., and Italy was presently divided into petty principle.

A. D., and Italy was presently divided into petty principalities. In 800 A. D., Charlemagne and the Pope attempted to revive the imperial glories of by establishing a holy Roman empire, embracing the largest part of Western Europe, including Italy. But the time had not come for a unified government on such a grand scale, and when the mighty personality of Charlemagne vanished the empire fell to pieces. In 843 the empire of Charlemagne was divided into three parts, and Italy, with 843 the empire of Charlemagne was divided into three parts, and Italy, with a part of what is now France and Germany, was given to one of his grandsons. This King and his successors maintained only a shadow of authority over Italy, and soon the peninsula was in the hands of a host of princes, who ruled small areas under the feudal system.

The great religious movements of the eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth centuries, the crusades, opened up trade routes which made Italy the comtrade routes which made Italy the commercial center of Europe and created the powerful city republics of Venice, Genoa, Pisa, Florence. As individual states, these rich and cultured communities became of considerable importance in the diplomacy of Europe, but no attempt was made by these cities to weld the Italian peoples into a great nation. Through the long centuries of medieval history down to the period of the French revolution the Italians, divided into petty States, had no conception of a united Italy.

divided into petty States, had no conception of a united Italy.

Uniteation of Italy.

Then came Napoléon with his grand imperial dream. His victorious armies overran old boundaries and uprootéd ancient landmarks. On his reconstructed map of Europe he wrote "Kingdom of Italy" in bold characters across the peninsula. At Milan in 1805 he assumed the iron crown of the ancient Lombard line and took the title of King of Italy. But this partial unification of the peninsula was shortlived, for when the Congress of Viennamet in 1815 to undo the work of the defeated Emperor the overturned Italian thrones were reëstablished.

But the brief taste of comparative freedom and of partial unification which the Italians had enjoyed had aroused a desire for national independence and unity which was destined to work out slowly and painfully an Italian nation. About the middle of our century the one liberal and statesmanlike monarch in Italy was Victor Emmanuel II, King of Sardinia. His great minister, Count Cavour, was a most ardent believer in Italian unification, and the liberal King with his wise minister set to work to realize the dream of Italian patriots. Inspired by the knightly Garibaldi and by Cavour, Victor Emmanuel joined France in a successful war with Austria for the liberation of Northern Italy, and then began to extend the kingdom of Sardinia. In 1861 Victor Emmanuel assumed the title of King of Italy, During the decade from 1860 to 1870 province after province united with the new kingdom of Italy, and finally, in 1870, after a sharp struggle with the Pope, supported by France, Victor Emmanuel annexed the papal States, entered the city of the Caesars in triumph, and from this new capital began to rule a united Itay. The dream of nationality was realized.

The Italian Constitution.

The Italian Constitution.

The little kingdom of Sardinia expanded into the present kingdom of Italy without changing materially its form of government. During the memorable year of 1848, when a revolutionary movement swept all Europe, forcing the monarchs to make liberal concessions in order to stem the rising tide of democracy, the father of Victor Emmanuel had granted his people a constitution called the statuto. This document remains the tution called the statuto. This document remains the constitution of united Italy today. It has never been amended formally, but the government conducted under it has been changed in spirit and adapted to new conditions in the same way that our American Constitution has been modified—that is, by more liberal interpretation. Moreover, since the written constitution is very general in its terms the Italian government has found concertingly to develop much as the English found opportunity to develop much as the English parliamentary system has developed by legal—distom. As in Engand, precedent governs in the absence of written provisions in the constitution minutely prescribing the organization and the powers of the various governing bodies.

King and Cabinet. The chief executive of Italy is the King. The kingly office is hereditary, descending in the male line of the royal family. By the terms of the statuto the King has very large power, but custom has narrowed his authority. For instance, his assent is theoretically necessary for legislation; practically, he never refuses approval of laws passed by the chambers.

Through custom, which has the force of law, the real executive of Italy is a ministry responsible to the popular branch of the national Legislature. Thus the parliamentary system of Cabinet government, originating in England and adopted, with modifications, by France, is also the governmental system of Italy. The Cabinet consists of eleven ministers, each one presiding over a great department of state. In theory the King chooses these ministers. In practice he selects as prime minister a man who commands a majority in the Chamber of Deputies, and this premier constructs a cabinet. When the Cabinet loses the confidence of the Chamber of Deputies the King accepts the resignations of the members and calls upon the leader of the victorious opposition to form a new cabinet. Thus, Italy has free government through a responsible ministry.

HUMBERT IV, KING OF ITALY.

The Senate.

The Italian Parliament is composed of two houses the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies. The Senate is aristocratic in theory. It represents rank, wealth and scientific attainment. It is made up of the princes bishops, high officials of the military and civil service, men who have had at least six years' service in the Chamber of Deputies, those who pay a minimum annual tax of about $600, and then who are distinguished for unusual scientific attainment or exceptional service to the State. The Senate is permitted to judge whether a person nominated by the King properly belongs to one of the specified classes, and thus it controls its own membership. It is a large body, at present consisting of 372 members. The appointment of members is for life.

LE EEEEEEEEEEEEEEEE

of 372 memoers. The appointment of includes the life.

In addition to its legislative duties the Senate has certain judicial functions. Like the United States Senate, the Italian Senate tries impeachment cases. It also sits as a court in cases of high treason, and has the curious privilege of trying all accusations against members of its own body, who are thus exempt from continuous process. ordinary process. Chamber of Deputies.

Chamber of Deputies.

The popular body, the Chamber of Deputies, is elected by a district system similar to that of the United States. The franchise is more limited than ours, however. The limitation imposed is a very reasonable one which many students of politics would be glad to see applied in our own country. Education, service to see applied in our own country. Education, service to the State or property holding are made the tests of fitness for the franchise. With the exception of the classes enumerated hereafter all those who apply for the voting privilege are required to show ability to read and write, and are compelled to pass an examination in the elementary subjects covered by the compulsory education course. However, those who can show a medal received for military or civil service or who pay a direct tax of about $4$ annually, or rents to 47 certain specified amount are exempt from examination. In Italy, where illiteracy is very prevalent, the educational qualification excludes from the franchise a large percentage of the population.

The present number of the Deputies is 508. The maximum term is five yeas, but dissolution of Parliament generally cuts this short, and the average term of a Deputy is about three years. The Chamber of Deputies enjoys the same special privilege accorded to the United States House of Representatives and British House of Commons in that revenue bills must originate in this body of the representatives of the people.

Supremacy of the Deputies.

The Chamber of Deputies of Italy presents many

nate in this body of the representatives of the people. Supremacy of the Deputies.

The Chamber of Deputies of Italy presents many points of similarity to the French body of the same name, and to the British House of Commons. Like the House of Commons, it is the real governing body of the nation. The ministry is responsible to it and must resign when the majority refuses to support a government measure. The relations of the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate are quite similar to those existing between the House of Commons and the House of Lords. In theory both branches of the Legislature are of equal authority in legislation. In practice the Chamber of Deputies can control the Senate and bend it to the will of the representatives of the people whenever serious conflict arises, just as the House of Commons can overrule the House of Lords. The method of control is the same in both countries. The ministry always represents the majority party in the Chamber of Deputies, and the ministry has the power, through the King, to appoint a sufficient number of new members of the upper house to give the desired majority to any measure upon which the popular body has determined. This has been threatened in England; it has been done in Italy. The Italian Senate is a more influential body than the British House of Lords, but its power is quite narrow, nevertheless.

Party Organization.

Party Organization.

In party organization the Italian Legislature resembles the French National Assembly rather than the British Parliament. In the House of Commons there are two great parties; in the Italian, as in the French Chamber of Deputies, there are a large number of party groups. In Italy, as in France, Cabinets must thus be sustained by coalitions of parties rather than by the compact majority of a single party. This makes ministries rather unstable, and it also gives larger room for the play of purely personal qualities in politics. In England it is party, rather than the man, that counts; in Italy the man dominates the party. When the party majority in the House of Commons changes the entire ministry resigns and an entirely new set of men of the opposite party form a government. In Italy the new ministry formed after a government defeat in the Chamber of Deputies may comprise several of the members of the defeated Cabinet, and it has often happened that a Prime Minister has met defeat by retaining office himself and making a new Cabinet by dropping certain members objectionable to the Deputies. This departure from the original form of parliamentary government is rendered possible by the peculiar grouping of the numerous parties in the Chamber of Deputies. It obscures party responsibility and is an evidence of imperfect party organization, according to the British or American standard.

The government problem in Italy is greatly complicated by the curious re-or American standard.

The government problem in Italy is greatly complicated by the curious relation existing between the Italian monarchy and the papacy. Away back in the early medieval times, the Pope received from a French king the grant of a considerable territory in Italy, to be administered by the church as a temporal kingdom. When the holy Roman empire was created in 800 A. D., Charlemagne confirmed the grant of land to the papacy and for more than one thousand years the Pope was not only the spiritual ruler of Christendom, but the temporal ruler of a large portion of Italian territory centering at Rome. When the Italian page tering at Rome. When the Italian natering at Rome. When the Italian na-tion was forming, an attempt was made to persuade the Pope to re-linquish his temporal power over the so-called papal States, but he refused. France sustained the Pope and for a time the advancing Italian nationality was halted at the walls of Rome. But in 1870 France was constrained to abandon the Pope, and Rome, by an overwhelming vote, joined its forces with the new nation.

Although every consideration has been shown to the Pope by the Italian government, he has thus far taken Pope by the Italian government, he has thus far taken an attitude of uncompromising opposition to the change of government, and has maintained that the church has been forcibly robbed of its rightful sovereignty. Since 1870 he has remained a voluntary prisoner in his spacious palace of the Vatican. The spectacle of the head of the Roman Catholic Church refusing to recognize the government of a people who, almost without exception, are loyal members of his church, is a very curious one. The party which upholds the claim of the Pope to temporal power is called the clerical party, and although it refrains from conscigntious motives from taking any part in national government and therefore has no representatives in the Chamber of Deputies, it is active in local affairs, and its presence is a disturbing force in national politics. Governmental Problems.

Govermental Problems.

Italy has serious governmental problems on her hands. She is a comparatively poor and undeveloped country, but she has aspired to take her place beside the greatest nations of Europe, and has burdened herself with a great fiset and an expensive army. Her citizens have inherited few traditions of self-government and large masses of them are densely ignorant. When we consider these facts we do not wonder at her financial difficulties, her frequent political unheavis and the scandal which clouds her civil service, which is administered on a plan only too familiar to Americans under the name of the spoils system. We only wonder that she has accomplished so much in achieving unity and laying the foundation of self-government.

LAY SERMONS,

OD over all, blessed forever!" What a comfort ing thought! A tender Father; a watchful Providence; a loving Friend; a mighty Helper and an all-sufficient Redeemer. Oh, weary soul, what and an all all substitutions and an all all substitutions and an all substitutions are faith grow dim, for this "God over all, blessed for-ever," is forever near, knowing our slightest wish, taking note of our every need, and ready to help us and pardon all our transgressions.

In all heathen religions the man who feels that he has been guilty of some great sin, believes that in order to obtain atonement for it he must do some act of penance that he may propitiate the diety whom he thinks that he has displeased. But the Christian faith holds up to us one who has offered Himself as a propitiation for our sins, an infinite Redeemer who will blot out our transgressions, if we but go to Him with humble and penitent hearts.

The great beauty of the Christian's faith is its simplicity. There are no burdensome and mysterious rites which we must observe before we can be pardoned; we have simply to go to Christ and confess our needs, and ask His forgiving grace and mercy, and we shall find Him "mighty to save."

The difficulty with a great many of us is that we do not fully and earnestly believe in Christ's willingness to pardon. The gift of grace is so free we can scarce believe that it is ours.

The difficulty with a great many of us is that we do not fully and earnestly believe in Christ's willingness to pardon. The gift of grace is so free we can scarce believe that it is ours.

But let us consider for a moment what is our relationship to God. We are His children, the creatures which His own hand has formed, to whom He has given life, and whom He has fashioned with infinite capacities for love and worship. The larger the company of God's redeemed, the more glorious and glad will be the better land. Christ, with His divine humanity, comes very near to His children, knowing, as He does, all "their frame," and their continually-growing power of comprehending all truth. He had His beloved disciples here on earth, but how many beloved disciples will He have in heaven!

Man is created in the image of God, and when that image is purified from sin there is very much which God and man hold in common. There is the same love of purity and righteousness; of truth as truth; the same devotion to God's eternal purposes, differing only in degree according to our knowledge. There is for God's children, redeemed through the blood of Christ, the same immortal future which belongs to God, a long eternity of unending years, in which man will be continually approaching nearer to the Infinite Father, and rejoicing more fully in His presence and the perfections of His character.

As man is lifted up, and as he unfolds in knowledge, how much greater will be his capacity for companionship, and for sharing in the vastness of God's purposes and plans. What a volume will the created universe be for him to read and study. What histories of angels will be unfolded to him; what an infinite record of God's providence and forgiving love. There will be no lar in that better life twixt God and man. No field that he will not be permitted to explore, for he shall walk with God and learn of Him.

And can we for a moment suppose that God is ever, even for a moment, indifferent to such a creature as shall walk with God and learn of Him.

And can we for a moment suppose that God is ever, even for a moment, indifferent to such a creature as this? That His hand is not forever outstretched to help and to save? No! "God so loved the world"—not the individual alone, but "the world, that He gave His only begotten Son that whomsoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Oh, this glorious fullness of free grace, it is our Godgiven heritage! Shall we then hesitate to believe? For what more do we wait? Listen to the tender voice which is saying, "Come unto me all ye who are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

THE MORNING SERMON

THE VICTORY OVER HATRED.

By Rev. Frederick O. MacCartney, Minister First Unitarian Church, Rockland, Mas your enemies, do good to them that hate you, bless them se you, and pray for them that despitefully are you."

OW few of us have regarded these familiar words as presenting an ideal for our realization. We smile and say: "This command to love one's enemies is utterly impractical and impossible." Yet if we think a little longer, we may realize that this law of love is the one great practical and rational thing which, when fulfilled in our lives, shall have transformed them.

For these phrases express that which is most fundamental in the teachings of Jesus, and constituted, when put into life, a vital portion of his religion. It was the incorporation of this very spirit of love which keeps you in regard and love for the Son of Mary; this is the strange fascination, the secret of that power which makes your unrevealed divinity respond to his revealed godlikeness. Love should triumph over hate!

The term love, as used here, obviously does not signify simply that natural and spontaneous affection which one has for brother or sister, mother or child. It must be used in a broader sense. Love is not merely an emotion. It is a principle, it is a habit of the mind, an attitude of the will.

Thus when we are admonished to love enemies, it is to a high and noble attitude of mind and heart and will that we are called; to the attainment of a spiritual affection. No admonition could be more comprehensive than this, for it includes thought and word and deed: "Pray for them that despitefully use you," or have right thoughts toward an enemy. "Bless them that curse you," or, speak well to and of an enemy; and finally, "Do good to them that hate you."

Take the first of these admonitions. It is obvious that Jesus did not mean that one should outwardly pray for a man, while in heart hating him. To ask a blessing on the man whom you would injure, if you could, would be worse than cursing him to his face. It would be hypocrisy and blasphemy. Christ must have meant that in the inmost depths of the soul there should be a benignant spirit, even toward an enemy, and an expect desire. Thus when we are admonished to love enemies, it is meant that in the inmost depths of the soul there should be a benignant spirit, even toward an enemy, and an earnest desire for his best good.

Bless him who curses you. If my heart is right toward him who hates me, my words will manifest the inner spirit. Surely these words are searching! Here we are told to return blessing for railing, to speak in kindness to him who turns upon us with hateful, taunting words. There is in every man something that should receive praise. Add not curse to curse, for he in whom there is no trace of good is already thrice cursed.

Do good to him who hates you. The natural tendency is to leave a man strictly alone who is an enemy, even when no harm is done him. But we are told here to pursue a contrary course. If a man who hates us falls in business or is threatened with failure, the instinctive prompting is to let him alone in his financial ruin, or possibly hasten his downfall. Under this command we would do all in our power to preserve his financial integrity.

In a thousand ways, in every relationship of life, mand we would do all in our power to preserve his financial integrity.

In a thousand ways, in every relationship of life, there is opportunity of putting into execution this command, which at first seems so strange and impractical. Turn to our deepest consciousness of truth and we are compelled to admit, as we see the comprehensiveness of these words of the great Teacher, that the ideal here presented must be realized by us, if we shall attain the highest life—and we are confronted with our impotency in carrying out this divine word.

It may be that we can find some helpful suggestions whereby we may attain the victory over hatred, and—love. For love may triumph over hate!

Let me say first that many an enmity arises from misunderstanding. Often an action admits of two interpretations. One interpretation would lead a person to conclude that an offense was intended by another. A breach thus occurs between two friends. It is a critical moment. Unless an understanding is reached the situation becomes more serious. Instead of an investigation of the cause of coolness, one word of condemnation gives occasion for an answering word of anger, until a bitter enmity results. In such a case only an understanding, the mutual admission of wrong, and a giving and receiving of forgiveness, can reëstablish the friendship.

Again, a man may dislike another because of tem-the friendship.

Again, a man may dislike another because of temperamental difference. If one man is fiery, enthusiastic and radical, the cool, phlegmatic and conservative man may become antagonistic to him. Are you of the former type? Then make allowance for this seeming sluggishness; imagine yourself of like temperament, and the whole tendency of such an attitude will be to cultivate the spirit of forbearance and kindness, which will gradually become the spirit of love. But if you are of the latter type, deliberate and cautious, and you have incurred the ill-will of a radical and excitable man, you in turn must consider this natural difference of mental constitution. nstitution constitution.

But in the practical realization of this word of Jesus, we must face severer tests. "If a man hates me," you ask, "with a passionate and implacable hatred, what shall I then do?" "Suppose," you continue, "that he is attempting to injure me in all ways possible, that he has vilified me or the ones I love, that he has attacked my reputation, defrauded me, pursued me reientlessly? How can I love such a one?"

How can I love such a one?"

Can you believe that each man, no matter how bad, is a child of God; has a divine something in his nature, which will eventually transform his baseness, and change his whole being? If you can thus believe, you will have a powerful motive in gaining the victory over the tendency to return hate for hate. Let this transcendent faith take possession of you in regard to an enemy. Look beneath the passion, the distorting rage, the mean and base, and try to discern the elements of goodness, the indications of a better nature. Sometime, not afar off it may be, in the quivering sunlight of a day of God, the last vestige of hatred will be stripped from the man who hates you, and he will stand clothed in garments white as light, the vesture of kindness and good-will, and his thoughts will be gentle, like those of a child. There will be peace upon his face, for he has come to you and confessed his transgression, and you have gladly forgiven him, and he has gone forth at harmony with himself and with the universe. But put not off this day of reconciliation to that distant time. If possible let that day be here now.

he has gone forth at harmony with himself and with the universe. But put not off this day of reconciliation to that distant time. If possible let that day be here, now.

However, motive is inadequate to give us this power of loving those who hate us. No man can attain unto the spirit of love, who does not live in communion with All Love. Only as we walk with Ineffable Love can we attain the power of loving enemies. Once come within the encompassing compassion of the Father, and you cannot but be compassionate. Breathe in the atmosphere of divine tenderness and, pervading the chambers of your inner life, will be a presence of love.
Love will triumph over hate!

Such a spirit as this is that which will conquer, and which will eventually bring in the reign of peace. What happiness there would be in the heart of each of us today, if we knew that there was not a being in the universe with whom we were at enmity!

There is no happinese in that human heart where hate holds its ominous abode. Strive as we may, struggle after goodness as we may, just as long as we cherish malice so long will there be unrest, so long will there be a vague sense of something out of harmony, a discord which will mar the sweetest music of our lives.

As we see how severe the test is—this realization of the law of love in our lives—we may be discouraged and falter, even in the attempt at fulfillment. Yet this thing can be accomplished by possessing divine power.
Jesus did this very thing.

In the halls of Herod I see a form, clad in a purple robe, seated upon a mock throne. A reed whose frailness betrays the satire is in his hand. A crown of thorns is crushed down upon the marble brow. Before him kneel the rude and ignorant ones who do him homage insincere, while others, giving way to rage and fury blind, add to the revolting horror of the scene by spitting on the Royal One. Yet, look you! Amid this ignominous scene of shame and degradation He sits in patience. There is no word of anger, no answering rage for rage, but calm enduran shines a tenderness like unto infinite love. Love has triumphed over hate!

Look still again! The scene has changed. There is a gloom in the air, covering with partial darkness a hill outside the city gate. Three forms you see, though indistinct, lifted from the earth, nailed to three crosses. There are groups of men beneath the crosses. There is a confused murmuring, words of command, entreaties, the groans of the suffering, coarse and brutal jests, words of surprise, the low cries of sorrowing women.

That man on the cross upon the right is a thief; and curses with foaming lips the ones who execute the decrees of the law. That man to the left, on the cross, is silent. But as you bend forward and listen closely, you will hear broken words coming from the One upon the central cross. These words are not curses. No. He is praying; and these are the words which fall from His lips, quivering with pain: "Father"—there are curses and jeers from the tormenters, but you draw still nearer and listen more intently—"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Love triumphs over hate. Triumphant in life, triumphant in death!

A RAGE FOR BARBARIC JEWELS.

IBY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

Bracelets and anklets as burdensome in appearance as shackles, and heavily-linked chains are accepted as the latest mode in jewelry by well-gowned women. They first came out in Paris, last spring, and were worn exclusively on the ankles, with the short bicycle worn exclusively on the ankles, with the short bicycle skirts that were there fashionable. When they were imported to this country it was naturally thought they were to be worn on the wrists, but the public eye is at last being opened, however, by two New York women who have just returned from Paris, and who wear them about the ankle, or just at the top of the boot, when donned in their sporting clothes. It is said on good authority that several other women have already been measured for them. The most beautiful ones are undoubtedly those that are enameled, or the dull-gold ones that are studded win uncut stones. But one is admissible, and it should be worn on the left foot. This tendency for massive, barbaric jewelry is also noticed in the bands of gold of exquisite Etruscan work-manship which are worn low on the forehead with dinner or evening gowns; and in the heavy chains that fall to the knees after being wrapped several times around the throat. Suspended at the ends of them, there is often a small, single eye-glass, a diminutive fan, or an odd, little notebook. The revival of this fashion of wearing chains, it is interesting to reflect, originated in Rome at a fashionable bazar for the benefit of a convent, when three long chains of cut jets were strung by the nuns and offered for sale. They Afterward, a large demand for them was made in Paris, and the inventive city was soon taxing its powers to present them in numerous forms and styles. Frequently they can be picked up very cheaply at old curio shops. About thirty of them are necessary to fill in properly a chain of moderate length. Beside the cost of the chain and the stones, at least $1 or $2$ apiece must be allowed for the setting of them. The various size, shape and color of the stones make the chain very interesting.

Postoffice Figures.

HE annual readjustment of salaries for Presidential postoffices, recently reported from Washington, shows several advances for Southern California offices. Corona is increased from $1100 to $1200; Pasadena from $2000 to $2700; Riverside from $2400 to $2500; Santa Ana from $2100 to $2200; and Santa Paula from $1500 to $1600. Rural free delivery will be extended at Santa Barbara, and a postoffice is established at Pierce, Riverside county, about twenty miles each way from the offices of Banning and Indio.

Water on the Desert.

H. SILSBEE recently returned to San Diego from the Colorado Desert, where he had been to look after his stock interests. He reports the weather as mild and pleasant for this time of year, and gives the San Diego Union the following information:

"The overflow of the Colorado has already reached the lagoon north of Cameron Lake, and Mr. Silsbee be-lieves that the water will reach Salton Basin, though it lieves that the water will reach Salton Basin, though it is not expected to fill that great depression as it did some years ago. Cattle have been doing well, having had good grass feed until the bottoms along the creek were filled with river water, and being now supported in a satisfactory manner by the basin in the more inviting places. Very few prospectors have been seen crossing the desert or looking for gold anywhere on the great waste this season.

"Mr. Silsbee states that a party of seven or eight men who were unknown to him have gone with a good-sized pack train into the Picacho placer mining section south of Jacumba, with the intention of developing water for the working of the diggings, known for some time to be rich. The nearest water to the placers is Bitter Creek, at least of ten miles away, and a ditch or pipe line and probably be used. The field is between the main mountain range and the Cocopah country. The men met by Mr. Silsbee are said to be backed by the Lower California Development Company."

San Pedro Pumber.

HE four lumber yards at San Pedro did a big business during the month of May. The sales and shipments of the San Pedro Lumber Company alone aggregated over 3,700,000 feet or number, according to the San Pedro American. This indicates a large amount of building in progress throughout Southern California, and a rapidly growing market in Arizona. A large fleet of lumber vessels is at sea on the way to San Pedro. The present year promises to break the record for lumber business at the free harbor site.

Petroleum Possibilities.

N SPITE of the failure which attended the boring of an oil well at San Pedro, about a year ago, the derrick of which was purchased by a well borer, and removed to the site of the remarkable spouting well at Santa Fé Springs, there are still a number of San Pedro people who believe that, if a well were sunk in the right locality, a good deposit of petroleum would be A San Pedro paper tells of a quantity of liquid asphaltum which has been uncovered at a depth of less than 200 feet, and urges a systematic exploitation of the underground resources of that locality.

A Mountain Railroad.

HE Brooking Lumber and Box Company of San Bernardino county, which has the largest sawmill in Southern California, has advertised for contracts to haul the iron and rolling stock necessary for its on the mountain range. Forty men are at work making the grade. It is said that the road will be in operation in time for the company to supply the fall and winter demand for orange and lemon boxes.

BOUT a year ago there was quite a boom in tobacco culture in Southern California. Of late, not so much has been heard upon the subject, although a number of persons are still raising the weed, on a small scale. Among others, M. H. Kimball of Santa Monica regularly grows a small patch for his own use.

The Santa Monica Outlook says that Mr. Kimball can cut his crop four or five times during a se grows the Connecticut seed-leaf variety, and finds the quality excellent. In his opinion, tobacco would prove one of the most remunerative crops that could be planted in this region, soil and climate both being peculiarly adapted to the purpose. In the East but a single cutting per year can be grown, which gives to this locality a remarkable advantage over that tobaccogrowing region.

Railroad Surveys.

CCORDING to the Randsburg Miner, there are two parties of surveyors running lines from some point in Utah across Southern Nevada and into California, for the extension of a railroad. The Miner says:

nia, for the extension of a railroad. The Miner says:

"What point they aim to strike here is not known, whether across to the head of Kern River through Walker's Pass, making connection with the Southern Pacific near Bakersfield, or at Mojave to the south of the Tehachepi, or the Santa Fé at Barstow, or some point west. The first party is not far from Granite Wells and will pass that point four or five miles north and west. The second party are some distance further back. They have come by way of Leach's Point, Owl Holes and Saratoga Springs. Their movements will be watched with interest."

Uses of Cactus.

HE cactus which grows so thickly in some parts of Southern California has manifold uses, which many people do not know of. A writer in the San Diego Sun says:

"In your paper of the 13th is an article headed, "Cactus Leaves Cure Mr. Lindley of Rattlesnake Bite," and close by stating: 'Thus a real use has been found for the unlovely cactus at last. That is one of the oldest and best known remedies for rattlesnake bite. It is a waste of time and labor to roast it, as it will cure just as quick if mashed and a poultice applied without being roasted.

"The flat leaf cactus is used for other purposes. If they are sliced and boiled and the juice mixed with whitewash, it will last for many years; it lasts as long as if mixed with glue.

"On the plains where there are many cattle and plenty of cactus, in a season when feed is scarce, the cattemen put a gas machine on a wagon, which they run alongside a bunch of cactus and, with a torch, burn the thorns off, Then the cattle eat it. One year ago, I fed it to my cow, a well-bred one. She ate it as readily as beets, and the milk had no different taste than when fed on beets or any other green feed.

"Another use is for mulching. One year in El Cajon I planted some fruit trees, and after the roots were covered with earth I put two layers of the cactus leaves in each hole, then covered them with earth. The trees all continued to grow until the frost stopped them in the autumn. They were not irrigated at all, and it was not a very wet season either."

Protecting Forest Reservations,

OL. B. F. ALLEN, supervisor of the five forest reservations of Southern California, has from the Federal government an allowance for the fiscal year beginning July 1 of $150,000, which will enable him to do more effective work than heretofore. He selects men to act as rangers on the reservations. There are now employed forty-one men in this manner. After July 1, Col. Allen is authorized to appoint nine more Col. Allen approves of the cutting of trails into the reserves, so that fire-fighters can get in easily.

San Diego Fortifications.

ORK is actively progressing on the foundations for the big guns at San Diego. The fourth emplacement for a 10-inch battery will be ready for the gun and carriage in about a month. The big rifle has already been shipped from the East. In the course of an interview on improvements that are under way, Capt. J. J. Meyler said to the San Diego Union:

"In about three weeks I expect to advertise for bids for the construction and extension of the jetty, and I hope to make a material and beneficial addition to the present jetty work, with the $65,000 that will be avail-At present the jetty extends out from shore 4000 feet, but the outer 640 feet has been built up only to mean lower low water. The $65,000 will build about 1000 or 1200 feet, which will leave about 2500 feet more 1000 or 1200 feet, which will leave about 2500 feet more to be built. I do not think the jetty, even when finished to its full length of 7500 feet, will change the bar, but it will concentrate the ebb tide so effectually that a little dredging will remove the bar, and the jetty will be able to keep it down.

"Capt. Humphreys has been notified that a range-finder for the fortifications is being built and will soon be here. I have been instructed to make an estimate for a station that will be built for it. A searchlight plant is now here, and as soon as other work will permit, I will construct a shelter and station for it. All these works are to be constructed/on the appropriation mit, I will construct a shelter and station for it. All these works are to be constructed on the appropriation made previously to the last fortification bill, so it is possible that in addition to this we will receive allotments for constructing the other batteries.

"There will be a battery of sixteen 12-inch mortars on Point Loma about opposite Ballast Point, and sixteen 12-inch mortars on the Coronado sandspit, one and one-quarter miles south of Hotel del Coronado. A battery of rapid-fire guns is also to be placed about three-quarters of a mile south of the 10-inch batteries.

NE of the important manufacturing industries of Southern California is that of the California Portland Cement Company of Colton, which has an extensive plant for manufacturing cement, lime, marble dust and crushed rock, near that city. In the rear of the mill towers Slover Mountain, with a seemingly inexhaustible supply of pure calc spar. Two of these deposits, at short distances, supply abundant crude ma-Besides the limestone, which is almost chemically pure, there is a clay adapted to the manufac-ture of cement, about four hundred pounds of this being used to 1000 pounds of limestone. The process of making the cement is carried on under the constant direction and analysis of a chemist. The Colton News

"The crude materials are first crushed, mixed by weight, then ground into a mass, and then put into a kiln, venty-five feet long, at the rate of three tons an hour where they remain for about one and three-quarters of an hour. The low heat from the upper end of the kiln drives off the moisture from the raw mixture; the low heat of the middle part decarbonizes the limestone red heat of the middle part decarbonizes the limestone, and the high heat of the lower end causes the caustic lime, alumina and silica to unite to form Portland cement clinker. The mix now agglutinates into little lumps the size of nuts. After leaving the kiin the clinker is put upon the ground and left to cool for a day or two. After this it is ground into Portland cement. The material which entered the kiin as a mechanical mixture now come out a chemical compound. After the cement has been ground and again mixed, it is put in sacks holding ninety-five pounds. A sample is taken from every tenth sack, tested and a record kept and mailed to purchasers so as to satisfy certain specifications necessary, before leaving warehouse. After being kept in the warehouse from one to three months so as to be perfectly dry, it is shipped away to fill the orders of purchasers. About twelve thousand barrels are on hand at this writing, and a supply is always kept at the cement works. The limestone used is 98 to 99 per cent. carbonite of lime. The Portland cement is used in various irrigation and hydraulic power systems in Southern California and also in making tunnels. The cement works being situated in this city where it is the center of the orange belt of Southern California, has an extensive trade and gives employment to a large number of men who would otherwise seek employment elsewhere. Seventy-four men are now employed at the works, and the mill is kept running day and night. The work is divided into three shifts, some working eight and some twelve hours. Closing the Gap.

HE Santa Barbara correspondent of The Times writes as follows:

"The railroad camps at Ellwood are demanding all the men that can be had to push the work at the points where the ground is broken. McCormick's camp is larger now than it was ever before and about sixty men are at work for Ramish & Marsh. These contractors are largely under way with their work, but will increase the number of men at the camp as rapidly as possible. Laborers are coming into the city from all directions, most of the men coming from Los Angeles. The forces at the camps are continually changing, and the roads to the north and south are literally alive with tramps working their way to and from the line of

The old line is not practical for the accommodation of fast through trains and those owning property along the new line seem in-clined to charge enormous sums for rights-of-way. The prices ackarge are many cases wildly out of proportion in the Fasadena News, who recently visited the section referred to, says:

"I drove out through Baldwin's ranch to Santa Anita avenue, then down the avenue to road running east; thence east to the road south over the San Gabriel River bed. Not a drop of water in sight. Nothing but dry sand, wire grass and cacti. We drove out of the river bed at Peck's ranch. Thence over a sandy road, out half a mile to a little building where a forty-horse rower steam energie is numning water from beneath the power steam engine is pumping water from beneath the dry, sandy surface. And then the sight! "Good for sore eyes. Made sore by the contemplation of the needs of Pasadena. One hundred and fifty inches of the needs of Pasadena. One hundred and fifty inches of clear, cold, sparkling water as ever welled up from the bosom of the earth to bless the fruitful soil. R. Piercy owns the plant. It cost him about $2500. He uses oil for fuel. Six barrels in twenty-four hours. Costs him $1.20 a barrel. The depth of his well is 150 feet. The water rising to thirty feet from surface. He uses a Jackson centrifugal pump and that 150 inches of water just boils and rushes from the top of the pipe, as if the biggest kind of an encaladus was spouting it out with all his might. Mr. Piercy uses this water to irrigate his alfalfa and the crops. If Mr. Piercy does not have good crops it will not be from lack of water and sunshine."

We suggested the use of electric power from the San Gabriel Company, whose lines run near.

"Mr. Pierson said he had considered that, and while the cast per hour might be less, the company would not guarantee to furnish any power from 5 o'clock p.m. to 11, that being the time when the maximum service is required of the company, and it might be necessary to run the pump the whole twenty-four hours.

"The next plant visited was that of J. S. Killian, about a mile and a half south of the former two.

"Mr. Killian is the pioneer in this district in the pumping business, having put in his first well some two or three years ago. His first well was not a success, he having attempted to dig the whole depth. I ought to explain for the benefit of those who have not seen these wells, that they are dug down to or nearly to the water. Then a tube is sunk fifty or seventy-five feet and the centrifugal pump placed at the top of the tube or the bottom of the larger well.

"Mr. Killian has five wells with four engines and boilers, each engine operating a pump, and the whole plant pouring out 500 inches of water. If any of you wish to see a sight just drive down and see that 500 inches of water come boiling and roaring out of the top of those pumps.

"If you wish to ask any questions of the courteous at-

of those pumps.

"If you wish to ask any questions of the courteous attendant, you must how! at the top of your voice, the roar and rush is so loud. It is a small river that flows from the plant. Did this tremendous outpour apparently decrease the amount in the wells, I asked? Within a few minutes after the pumps are set at work the water in the wells decrease or settle about six feet. It then remains at that level and no amount of pumping changes it.

"Another interesting fact is that the pumping from then remains at that level and no amount of pumping changes it.

"Another interesting fact is that the pumping from wells on Mr. Killian's place has no effect on any other, although all are within a radius of fifty feet.

"Where does the water come from?

"Engineer Lippincott's theory is that it is a portion of the drainage of the San Gabriel watershed.

"But the popular theory obtaining in the district of the wells is that it is somewhat independent of that source of supply. In support of that theory, Mr. Pierson told me that one of the most experienced water prospectors and developers in the Azusa district at the mouth of the San Gabriel Cañon declares that there is no evidence there, so far as extensive borings indicate, of any such amount of water as appears out on the floor of the valley. They seem to think it possible that there may be some great subterranean fissure in the mountains which may carry the water of an immense watershed out into this valley.

"This is the district from which Mr. Lippincott proposes to draw the supply for Pasadena, and it would seems to an unscientific beholder of the marvelous outpouring from these wells to be an inexhaustible source. "There are several other wells in the same neighborhood and all yielding about the same amount for each well. I visited one other, that of P. F. Cogswell, a little south of Mr. Killian's. He is pumping about one hunwell. I visited one other, that of P. F. Cogswell, a little south of Mr. Killian's. He is pumping about one hundred inches, as he has need of not running continuously. "Altogether it is wonderful proof that there is more in the earth than any Horatio ever dreamed, saying nothing about heaven. Go on a picnic and see them. nothing about heaven. Go on a picnic and see them. The owners will be glad to see you, and will interest you with their talk."

Searchlight Mining District.

IN TRIBUTARY TERRITORY.

An Arizona Mining Boom

FTER years of patient waiting, following the dull times brought about by the fall in the price of A silver, Arizona is once more enjoying something like a mining boom, the activity being now based on the production of copper and gold, instead of silver. The Tucson Frontier says:

"The hunt and hunger for gold, for copper, for silver, "The hunt and hunger for gold, for copper, for silver, for iron—for what Arizonas mountains contain in quantities that will eventually affect the values of the world—grows apace. This hunt and hunger is the magnet that will locate and proclaim Arizona as earth's Mecca of wealth. We are nearing that epoch now. It is in sight. Today Arizona has within her boundaries, in person or in interest, most of the leading mining men of the continent; men with years of experience and training; men who are not drawn by those fitful fevers of mineral excitement, but who know what they are after, where it is and how to get it. Therefore Arizona is closing her first chapter of spasmodic; the holding in idleness of legitimate prospects from lack of influence to properly submit to capitalists; of selling "fakes" and "bricks" to eastern sharks who were experts in dangling mining stock before that neverending crop of suckers. We have crossed the stubble fields of mining and are now in the green pastures that reach beyond the vision and the prophesy of man. We are reminded of this vastly significant and momentous change by the interesting accounts of the big deals, big transfers, big improvements, big operations, daily transpiring—so numerous in fact that it is now impossible to keep them all in view or grasp their particular importance or size. Special reporters are constantly being sent into Arizona to write up this hig mine and for iron-for what Arizonas mountains contain in quantranspiring—so numerous in tact that it is now impos-sible to keep them all in view or grasp their particular importance or size. Special reporters are constantly being sent into Arizona to write up this big mine and that big mine. Amusing accounts are heard of how hard it is to guess which section is now the most imhard it is to guess which section is now the most important to direct public attention; which mine is, or may be, the world's wonder; which company leads in modern machinery, equipment, output and dividends. We become bewildered in the maze of today's mining activity. While meditating of the fact that it now requires three trains daily from Lordsburg to Clifton to supply the Clifton Copper Company with material and stores and that nearly one thousand freight cars fill the side tracks, waiting their turn to move a wheel, we are disturbed (pleasantly,) with the news that the Copper Gueen people are soon to build a railroad from Morenet to Safford and that a telephone system already connects these two points. Looking over at Globe we find the Old Dominion Copper Company erecting a hoist which is said to be the largest ever built in Arizona, but necessary to supply sufficient quantity of or to keep the smelters in full blast. It did not seem to be a question of ore quantity or ore facilities. At the Black Warrior mine a $40,000 leaching plant and other machinery is now being placed. Such a move will soon demonstrate whether this is really a mine of copper or simply one of our innumerable attractive appearing copper mines. The United Globe mines—formerly the Old Buffalo—are being extensively worked and the latest improved machinery is being installed. And, and, and—well, so it goes. From all sides comes unvarying reports—great activity, modern improvements, hig returns, big successes. What a change, what a growth, what an advance from the old arrastras, the misplaced mills, the lonesome bonanzas! The world moves and we move with it. Nay, we are helping to make it move! The nation's treasure box lies not in its customs duties, its excises and its taxes—it lies in Arizona and the key is now in the lock. We will soon be in the 'Sisterhood of States,' not as a 'poor relation,' but as the richest of them all. Rich not in manufactures, not in agriculture, not in trade, but rich by the grace and gift of nature, and let us add, by the exercise of human head, heart and muscle." Globe we find the Old Dominion Copper Company erect-

He tells me the beds are calculated to be 100 feet at least in thickness and some of them more. The specimens he showed me were beautiful beyond description. Every color and combination of color that delight the eye is present and the material takes an exquisite polish. There are nearly three hundred acres of this canyx here, enough to build a city, leave alone veneer it.

SMILES FROM A JUSTICE SHOP.

SMILES FROM A JUSTICE SHOP.

[Kansas City Star:] Once in a great while there is a chance to smile even in a justice court, where things are supposed to be so dry that the scales have to be primed every morning before they fall from Justice's eyes for the day. Here are two instances from the court of Justice Walls:

William Custer was to be arrested for abusing his wife. The man who went to swear to the complaint was a bit hard of hearing.

"What did the man do to his wife?" asked Justice. Walls, his pen poised above a blank form.

"Cussed her," replied the complainant.

Down came the pen, and Justice Walls wrote out the usual jargon about "did then and there with malice aforethought curse, threaten and abuse with loud, violent and unusual language," and so on.

"What's the man's name?" asked Walls, with his pen in the air again.

"What's the man's name?" asked Walls, with his pen in the air again.
"Custer," said the man.
"I've got all that," said Walls. "What's his name?"
"Custer," said the complainant, louder than before.
"I know that," shouted Walls. "You've told me that three times now. Think I'm deaf, too? What's the fellow's name? Who is he?"
"Custer," said the man. "William Custer."
"Oh," said Walls, coloring under the laughter of the others in the room, "why didn't you say 'Custer' in the first place?"

others in the room, "why didn't you say 'Custer' in the first place?"

And the complainant was wise enough not to risk being fined for contempt by answering that he did. Frank Davis had a fight with Ben Woods, and bit off the lower part of Woods's left ear. Woods naturally felt hurt about it and sought out Justica Walls to see what could be done. He didn't know much about law terms, but explained the trouble in his own way. "That's mayhem," said Walls, jamming the syllables together.

"That's mayhem," said Waits, Jamming the syntantes together.
"Maim?" exclaimed Woods. "I'm a cripple for life!
What can I do about it? That's what I want to know."
"Well," said Walls, "you might have him arrested and bound over to keep the peace."
"The piece?" snorted Woods. "What do I want with that? And besides he spit the piece out in the road and lost it."

[BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

Under the able administration of the Minister of Public Education in Rome, Sig. Bacelli, secrets the Ro-man Forum has hitherto withheld from the world are being wrested from the dust of ages. Some six months ago the announcement that the tomb of Romulus, the famous "Lapis Niger," had come to light during excavations in progress in the Comitium, (before the Church of St. Adriano, which was the old Curia, close by the arch of Severus,) caused great excitement in historical and archaeological ranks.

This Lapis Niger, commemorating the founder of the Eternal City, although it never received his body, is in fact a small pavement about twelve feet square formed of black marble blocks, irregular in size. It was pro-tected on all sides by a curb of travertine. The mar-ble, streaked with white, is recognized as coming from Taenarum, the black marble of Greece, "Marmo nero di Grecia." As usual, the valuable find has to be par-tially covered to protect it from relic hunters, lest, in the words of Horace,

"Quaeque carent ventis et solibus ossa Quirini, Nefas videre, dissipabit insolens."

Ancient authors mention the spot. Festes, calling it Niger Lapis, writes that there is a black stone in the Comitium, the supposed grave of Romulus. The Epodes of Horace (XVI, 13) mention also the tomb of Romulus, where also two lions stood. For some time it seems as though the excavators had turned their efforts to other portions of the Forum, (it would take too long to mention all the new discoveries within the area so fascinating to classical scholars,) but the Popolo Romano of June 1, inst., gives scholars,) but the Popolo Romano of June 1, inst., gives confirmation of the above testimony as to the black pavement being the famous Niger Lapis, the so-called Tomb of Romulus. "Yesterday," it says, "close to the Niger Lapis were found several most important objects. Two bases on which animals may have been supported (presumably the lions mentioned as standing beside the tomb of Romulus) and a Cippus—monumental stone shaped like a grayestone—on which is mental stone shaped like a gravestone—on which is engraved an inscription in the ancient Latin alphabet, that which was learned by the Romans from the Cumeans in the seventh century before Christ. Between the two bases were found most interesting objects, earthen vases, small idols and fragments of votive offerings, some of most primitive form, others more ar-earthen vases, small idols and fragments of votive offerings, some of most primitive form, others more artistic, and among these one admirable fragment of a Greek vase with black figures on a red foundation. The bases themselves date back to between the seventh and sixth centuries before Christ, being of rude architecture and worked in Tufa, the rock of the Campagna. "The inscription," continues the Italian paper, "follows the size of the Cippus, winding about so that unequal lines are written from right to left, and equal lines from left to right, making a uniform appearance. As the whole stone is not yet disinterred, and both sides show four lines of inscription, the studies of historians and archaeologists have not yet begun. At present the inscription remains undecipherable. It is supposed, however, to be dedicatory, perhaps a record of a great expiatory sacrifice offered to the gods on this spot, after the flight of the Gauls, who had ravaged and burned the city."

This idea agrees well with the topography of the Forum, and with the historical memories clustering about the Comitium. Here we have already in the Lapis Niger a monument belonging to the period of the kings. Near by is the arch of Severus attesting the moment of the greatest expansion of the empire, near by also the recently-discovered monumental column to Claudius Goticus, commemorating the successful resistance of Rome to barbaric invasion in the third century after Christ, almost the synthesis of the history of ancient Rome.

ADA M. TROTTER.

ADA M. TROTTER.

A BACHELORS' FAKE LUNCHEON, IT IS AN IDEA RECENTLY IMPORTED FROM PARIS

AND IS MOST AMUSING.

[BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.] The latest inspiration of the gilded bachelors who fondly term themselves Bohemians is the fake luncheon. And by those that have been bidden to the feast the idea is said to have been a most happy one. To enjoy oneself, however, even in a mild sort of way, it is necessary to go with a fund of good humor up the sleeve, and with a ready repartee on the tip of the tongue.

At a fake luncheon recently given at a bachelor's apartment on Madison avenue, in New York City, to twelve guests, it was noticed that the decorations of the table were not in the orthodox fashion. From a large horn of plenty, which was placed at one corner of the table, streamers of ribbon emanated to the places of the table, streamers of ribbon emanated to the places of each guest. Upon them were written curious little requests. One read: "Let there be silence while grace is being said." A rooster then strutted forth from the horn and crowed vigorously. The first course was hard-boiled eggs, at least it looked so, but when opened they were found to contain a delicious frozen bouillon. They had been most cleverly prepared. The raw eggs had first been blown and filled with the bouillon; the opening had then been covered over, and the contents frozen.

English muffins followed this course, and were invariably taken and laid by the side of the plates. The guest whose ribbon had dilated on the bad form of bread crumbling was the first to run his fingers into an inclosed timbale. The conventional instinct then arose closed timbale. The conventional instinct then arose to protest strongly against roast potatoes as a course, and it was only subsided by the precocious spirit who discovered them to be but the tomb of ill-fated snipe. A prettily-arranged salad of lettuce turned out to be an imitation in tissue paper. At the end of each leaf a verse was attached, or, in fact, a challenge to one's powers of repartee. The former fakes, however, had so quickened the intelligence that they were replied to with, considerable brilliancy.

The final course was oranges, which were filled with

The final course was oranges, which were filled with some delicious trifle, and a pull pie was greeted with shouts of joy. The "pulls" were humorous, and set cried, when, after scorching his fingers, he tugged at the tinsel mouthpiece and pulled out a pencil. "We'll be even," was heard more than once as the guests took their departure.

RUSSIA'S BIG DITCH,

It is proposed to make the city a maritime port, with dock accommodation, and a basin for shipping, comprising about thirty thousand acres. The canal will be about seventy-five miles long. The work has not yet been begun, but it is said that there is no doubt that the scheme will be carried through.

Both the Manchester ship canal and the projected waterway in Belgium sink into insignificance when compared with the Russian canal that is now being built from the Baltic to the Blake Sea. It is to be 1080 miles long, large enough to permit the largest warship to pass through. It will have a width at the top of 217 feet, and 117 feet at the bottom, with a depth of 28½ feet.

The canal is being so strongly built that vessels may steam through it at the rate of six knots an hour. It will take six days for a large vessel to pass through it, traveling night and day. The canal is to be lighted along the whole course by electricity, and the total cost is estimated at about £24,000,000. Four years will be required to complete the undertaking.

The advantages, commercial and otherwise, which Russia expects to derive from the making of this mammoth canal will more than compensate for the enormous outlay, and the scheme is viewed very favorably throughout the Czar's dominions.

"THE MOST UNKINDEST CUT OF ALL."

Two East Tennesseans, one of whom was the editor of the county paper, were one day having an argument about a bill that one owed to the other. As both were a little more than "three sheets in the wind," the argument was not so clear as it might have been; but, perhaps, some editors who have troubles of their own may be able to see the point and sympathize with a man who "got it in the neck," and didn't get his money:

"You'd better pay me that amount you owe me now," said the editor to his companion.
"I don't owe yer nothin'," was the reply.
"Yer do, and what's more, I can prove it."
"Prove it, then, but yer don't get nothing' fer yer trouble."

trouble."

The editor sat and thought. At last he raised his head; he had made up his mind to do the worst; he leaned his arm on the table and looked his fellow full in the eye; after a few seconds of silence these ominous words fell slowly and thickly from his lips: "Well, ef yer don't pay me, I'll—I'll—publish yer!"

"Publish, and be d——d," was the reply, "what do I keer fer yer publishin'? I can walk out'n yer circulation in ten minutes."

A COMMON OCCURRENCE.

[Chicago Times-Herald:] It was Saturday night, and he was on his way home. Stepping to the showcase in the cigar store he care-fully surveyed the goods that were displayed in the ovas.

"Are those three for a quarter?' he asked, pointing out a brand that seemed to please him.

"Yes," said the man behind the counter; "we're making a special sale of them this week. They have always been 10 cents straight."

"All right," said the customer, "let me have three of them."

A handful of the cigars were laid on top of the case and he carefully selected three of them, after which he handed out a half-dollar.

The shopkeeper played a little tune upon his cash register and passed back a quarter.

"Say," said the man who had bought the cigars, "can't you give me some smaller change? My wife wants me to go to church with her tomorrow, and I'll need something for the contribution, plate. I s'pose I might give up a quarter, but, by George, I have to work hard for every cent I get."

A KANSAS SUNFLOWER IN LUZON.
[Kansas City Journal:] Think of a Kansas sunflower blooming in far-off Luzon—the first American flower of any sort to spread its petals to the Oriental sun! Writing from Manila to his folks in Ottawa, Harry Heck, a member of the Twentieth Kansas who is on detached service in the headquarters telegraph office, says: "I believe I have the distinction of bringing the first American flower over here. I brought some sunflower seed and planted it in pots. One of the plants is in bloom and the rest have buds on them."

AN HONEST WOMAN.

AN HONEST WOMAN.

[Chicago Times-Herald:] Mrs. Emmons Blaine has scheduled her personal property for taxation purposes at $1,563,000. Coming on top of the reports of all manner of subterfuges adopted by men of large reputed wealth to evade the assessment of their personal property at any approach to its fair value, this act of Mrs. Blaine's is a rebuke to civic dishonesty, and should be an encouragement to the assessors to make their assessments of personal property so fair that she shall not bear more than her fair share of the tax burden. In making her return Mrs. Blaine told the assessors that she believed those able to pay the taxes should pay them. Therefore she made a careful estimate of her personal property to comply with the spirit as well as the letter of the law.

This honest personal-property schedule is not the

This honest personal-property schedule is not the only or the least evidence Mrs. Blaine has given of her recognition of the duty great wealth owes to the community where it has been acquired. It is only the other day that the announcement was made that she had set in America.

Mrs. Blaine has large real-estate holdings, besides her interest in the great manufacturing works which bear her father's name. These pay their legitimate share of the municipal burden. They are visible and could not escape if there was any desire that they

But the $1,563,000 personal-property schedule and the $1,000,000 educational endowment are Mrs. Blaine's voluntary contributions to the elevation of Chicago on the only two sure foundations of civic greatness—honesty and knowledge.

GORGEOUS INVITATIONS.

The invitations to President McKinley and President Diaz to attend the Chicago celebration next October are inclosed in handsome mahogany boxes made from the old government building at Chicago and lined with purple velvet. That for Admiral Dewey is lined with blue velvet, bears a gold monogram and is decorated with silver stars. Each invitation bears a pen drawing of the recipient.

A MONUMENT FOR THE SOLDIERS.

A monument for the soldiers!
And what will ye build it of?
Can ye build it of marble, or brass, or bronze, Outlasting the soldiers' love?
Can ye glorify it with legends
As grand as their blood hath writ
From the inmost shrine of this land of thine
To the outermost verge of it?

And the answer came: We would build it
Out of our hopes made sure,
And out of our purest prayers and tears,
And out of our faith secure;
We would build it out of the great white truths
Their death hath sanctified,
And the sculptured forms of the men in arms,
And their faces ere they died.

And what heroic figures
Can the sculptor carve in stone?
Can the marble breast be made to bleed,
And the marble lips to moan?
Can the marble brow be fevered?
And the marble eyes be graved
To look their last, as the flag floats past,
On the country they have saved?

And the answer came: The figures
Shall all be fair and brave,
And, as befitting, as pure white
As the stars above their grave!
The marble lips, and breast and brow
Whereon the laurel lies, Bequeath us right to guard the flight
Of the old flag in the skies!

A monument for the soldiers!
Built of the peoples love,
And blazoned and decked and panoplied
With the hearts ye build it of!
And see that ye build it stately,
In pillar and niche and gate,
And high in pose as the souls of those
It would commemorate! It would commemorate!
